Atom expert flies to Moscow

Stockholm, October 21.
The British atom scientist, Bruno Pontecorvo, flew to Moscow from Sweden last month. It was learned here today.

Pontecorvo, reported "missing" in Italy where he went on holiday from Britain, arrived in Stockholm on September 1 with his family. With his wife and three children, he spent the night here and left by air for Helsinki on September 2 on the way to Moscow, the Swedish Air Lines said.

His wife and three children were believed to have flown from Helsinki to Moscow with him. Between Rome and Copenhagen he had 85 kilos of luggage registered, but it was stated that Pontecorvo would not register 10 kilos of hand baggage which he insisted on having in the plane with him.

The hand luggage was believed to have included a thick briefcase.—Reuter.

Paratroops, infantrymen link up North of Pyongyang

FATE OF GARRISON SEALED

Tokyo, October 21.

United States forces virtually completed the destruction of Pyongyang's garrison of 27,000 men today and prepared to join the South Korean armies in a dash for the Manchurian border.

The Korean war appeared all over except for the mop-up of 36,000 disorganized Reds fleeing Northward toward the frontier. Allied bombers and fighters are taking a heavy toll of the retreating columns.

The United States First Cavalry Division sealed the fate of the troops of the Pyongyang garrison by linking up with the paratroops who jumped to earth on Friday across the Communist escape routes some 25 miles North of the captured Communist capital.

The ground and airborne troops met at 0050 GMT four to five miles South of Suncheon, 25 miles North East of Pyongyang and 85 miles from the Manchurian border.

With the junction of the two forces, an official spokesman said the Allies had killed, captured or trapped almost all the 27,000 Communist troops thrown into the little defence of Pyongyang. The roads within the steel ring above Pyongyang were littered with the bodies of hundreds of Red troops and masses of abandoned and wrecked equipment.

BRITISH BRIGADE

Pyongyang, October 21.
The 27th British Commonwealth Brigade was thrown into a new advance today on an objective along the Chongchon River approximately 40 miles North of Pyongyang. The Brigade is attached to the United States 24th Infantry Division.—United Press.

including tanks and anti-aircraft guns. More than 7,000 prisoners were taken in the past 24 hours alone boosting the war's total to more than 82,000.

A spokesman for General MacArthur said American and British troops will join the South Koreans in the final drive up to the Manchurian border. The First Cavalry Division is expected to be among the first to strike North. The Cavalrymen hoped to overtake the Communist troops reported to be marching hundreds of American war prisoners toward Manchuria.

Eight Americans who escaped their Red captors in Pyongyang said the Communists marched off 200 or more American toward the Northern frontier last Saturday. They said 81 other American prisoners died of beatings, shootings, dysentery, exposure and malnutrition during a forced march from Seoul to Pyongyang. The eight escapees were flown to Seoul's Kimpo airfield from Pyongyang today.

He said: "There were hundreds of dead bodies lying in ditches along the road together with masses of equipment including anti-aircraft guns and tanks. We drove them out of the capital and the planes must have caught them."

General Douglas MacArthur's Headquarters said all main roads in the Suncheon-Sukchon area, where the 4,100 American troops were blocked against the Reds, were cleared today.

SECOND JUMP BY PARATROOPS

Pyongyang, October 21.
Another 1,800 American paratroops jumped in the Sukchon area, 26 miles North of Pyongyang, on Saturday morning, according to a report received here.

(Officers at General MacArthur's headquarters in Tokyo said they had not heard of any paratroop jump since Friday's airborne operation at Suncheon and Sukchon.)

Lieutenant Robert Rosado, of Woodside, New York, said the second-day jump was carried out at 10 a.m. and that the paratroops met only sporadic firing from small pockets of North Koreans.—United Press.

An estimated 65,000 Communist fighting men left in North Korea thus will not be able to mass for any big future stand against Allied troops racing to bring the savage four-month-old war to an end, an intelligence officer said.

Headquarters said the Reds may be able to move some of the trapped 28,000 men over hill roads, but their heavy equipment was lost.

Death of Mr. Stimson

West Hills, NY, October 20.

Mr. Henry L. Stimson, aged 83, former Secretary of War and Secretary of State, died today of a heart attack at his country home here.

Members of his family said the elder statesman was stricken suddenly this afternoon and died at about 4 p.m.

Mr. Stimson had been confined to hospitals and his home since July 16 when he suffered a fracture of his left upper leg at his Long Island home here.

Mr. Stimson, a Republican, served in the Cabinets of four Administrations from President Taft to President Truman. A statesman who played duty before President Hoover's Secretary of State and again Secretary of War, building and directing the greatest army the United States ever had under Presidents Roosevelt and Truman.

He was appointed a United States attorney by President Theodore Roosevelt in 1900, was Governor-General of the Philippines under President Calvin Coolidge and in one of his last great decisions advised President Truman in 1945 to drop the atom bomb on Japan to stop World War II.

During his 40 years of public service, Mr. Stimson was a form-

French forces evacuate important post of Langson

Saigon, October 21.

French forces evacuated Langson, most important frontier post left to them on Communist China's border, on Wednesday, it was learned today.

The French High Command said it had decided to withdraw the Langson garrison to new positions. The evacuation of troops began on Wednesday and was continuing "favourably" with air cover.

Langson is the sixth border bastion to be abandoned by French military forces within a month.

The 78-year-old stone fortress of Dong Dang, only ten miles away, had been evacuated earlier this week leaving the way open for a direct attack on Langson by Vietminh guerrillas.

Langson's civilian residents quit the area before the French troops withdrew.

The withdrawal from Langson, which commands the main road from Communist China to Hanoi, capital of the North Indo-China rice delta province of Tonkin, was in accordance with a general plan to concentrate all French forces in the plain around Hanoi, the capital.

Informed sources said earlier that about 80,000 members of the French Union forces in the area are now expected to dig in about 80 miles South of the mountainous frontier region, defending a line at one point only 20 miles North of Hanoi itself.

"French Headquarters stated: 'The French High Command has decided to withdraw the Langson garrison to new positions. The military evacuation of the town began on October 18.'

"The move is being carried out in good order with only minor engagements," the Air Force is providing efficient air cover.

The communiqué added that no more withdrawals were contemplated and that French troops would resume the offensive after reorganization. It was emphasized that the withdrawal from Langson was not under enemy pressure but was a predetermined move to increase the mobile reserves at the disposal of the French High Command.

The communiqué said the increasing strength and mobility of the Vietminh forces in the past few months had obliged the French to adopt new combat methods based on powerful equipment and mobile units.

Those units could be created only by regrouping the battalions stationed on the border.

Reserves recalled

A certain number of French residents of Hanoi, belonging to the first French Army Reserve in Indochina, have been recalled for a 21 days military exercise, the Agency France Press reported today.

The action which did not affect the number of troops in the area was decided after the recent campaign in the Chinese-Vietnamese border and the evacuation of the French detachment in North Vietnam.

RN officers drowned in Portugal

Setubal, October 21.
Commander Archibald Cheyne, British Naval Attaché in Lisbon, and five naval officers from the destroyer Solebay were drowned when their car crashed into Setubal harbour last night.

Their bodies have been recovered and taken to the Roman Catholic chapel at the British Consulate.

The names of the five officers will be released when their next of kin have been informed. The two officers, two Lieutenant Commanders and three Lieutenants, were being driven by Commander Cheyne to a cocktail party being given in honour of the flagship Solebay, three other destroyers and two submarines of the Home fleet which arrived in Setubal yesterday morning.

Commander Cheyne's car was parked on a pier alongside the Solebay and it is believed that the reflection of the lights of his headlights on the water for a continuation of the pier and plunged 30 feet into the harbour.

A car following behind hooked to try and warn them but without success.

All ships in the harbour were immediately alerted and divers from the two submarines went down within 20 minutes but it was four hours before the car was recovered. All the bodies were still in the car and there were signs of a terrible struggle to escape.

Commander Cheyne was 42 years old.

His wife, daughter of British actress Zena Dore, was waiting for her husband at the cocktail party when she heard the news. There are two children, a boy and a girl, in England, and a baby girl with her mother in Portugal.—Associated Press.

UK cotton industry facing problems

Harrogate, October 20. Mr. Harold Wilson, President of the Board of Trade, said tonight that Britain's cotton industry was faced with real problems in the next 12 months because of the cut in American raw cotton supplies.

Opening a week-end Cotton Board conference here, Mr. Wilson said that it was hoped that this would be a temporary difficulty but he added that Britain's spinners would have to exercise even more ingenuity over their use of cotton.

This year's cotton crop in the United States, and indeed elsewhere, had been poor, and to safeguard their own production, the United States had felt themselves bound to impose a most severe restriction on exports of cotton, he said.

Britain had had to pursue a policy of minimizing consumption of United States cotton for exchange reasons, "but I am hopeful that the representations being made in Washington and elsewhere will make the Americans fully aware of our need for American cotton, bearing in mind the economies we have already made," he said.

Declaring that "raw materials supply is one of our biggest immediate problems," Mr. Wilson congratulated the industry on its rapid development of new artificial fibres.

"The proportion of rayon staple fibre processed by spinners has almost doubled in the last two years and the proportion is still rising," he said. The technical difficulties involved were not easy to solve and the industry was clearly showing great adaptability in overcoming them.

Mr. Wilson said that about half Britain's total exports were now going to the Commonwealth countries—over 70 per cent in the case of woven cotton piece-goods.

Mr. Wilson spoke of the growing competition, particularly in textiles, which must be expected from Japan. This was receiving the Government's very active attention and he hoped before long to make a full statement on Government policy on this matter.—Reuter.

Australian pounds were up three cents to HK$12.73. Plaster continued nominal at HK$13 1/4.

NO PROPAGANDA IN UK SCHOOLS

London, October 20. The Education Minister, Mr. George Tomlinson, told the House of Commons he had no evidence that Communist propaganda was being disseminated in State schools, otherwise he would have taken action at once.

A report from 237 head teachers of London schools to the London County Council showed that there was no cause for anxiety over Communist activities in London schools, he added.—Reuter.

TESTS OF ROBOTS FOR WAR

Stockholm, October 20. Swedish - built guided missiles will be tested under active service conditions in the near future, the Swedish Defence Staff announced today.

A special Robot Bureau, headed by Commander Johan Gabriel Oxenstierna, has been working on Swedish guided missile projects since 1949.

The announcement said the work of this Bureau had now advanced far enough to permit tests with training robots under active service conditions.

An experimental war organization for the guided missile weapon would be tried out later.

Swedish guided missile research has been conducted behind a thick veil of secrecy and it is understood that the brief announcement was prompted by the fact that open air tests could not be kept secret.

The Swedish military authorities, for security reasons, declined to disclose any details on Swedish robots.—Associated Press.

'Ceylonese only' plan in Colombo

Colombo, October 20. Ceylon's Minister of State, Mr. A. E. Goonesinha, today took his policy of "Ceylonisation" in employment a step further when he asked the Ceylon Employers' Federation not to employ non-Ceylonese in mercantile houses after November 1.

At a meeting with representatives of the Federation, Mr. Goonesinha proposed:

1. that no non-Ceylonese should be recruited by mercantile houses after November 1; 2. that Indians employed after the 1947 talks between the Ceylon Prime Minister, Mr. Don Stephen Senanayake, and the Indian Prime Minister, Pandit Nehru, should be replaced by Ceylonese staff; and 3. that preference should be given in employment to Ceylonese nationals by birth over those who acquired citizenship by registration recently.

During these talks, which dealt with the position of Indians in Ceylon, Mr. Senanayake was reported to have given an assurance to Pandit Nehru that Indians who did not wish to become Ceylon citizens would be permitted to pursue their normal avocations. The Federation undertook to place the proposal before its General Council.

Last month Mr. Goonesinha asked tea, rubber and coconut estate proprietors to employ only Ceylonese staff in future.—Reuter.

WHAT THE STARS FORETELL

By R.H. Naylor

In this weekly series of articles, one of the world's foremost experts in predicting the future gives his opinions on what you personally can expect in the weeks and months to come.

Look for your birth period below and find the general indications for the week. Note that these observations are made according to the Zodiacal Signs and do not exactly coincide with the Calendar Month. For example, January covers December 21-January 19.

will hear about it in next few days. In business a decisive policy does wonders; aim at snap deals and quick profits.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 22: FOR MOST OF US: You may find that people are inclined to take offence and that family tempers are on edge. Lively and interesting day if you don't object to quarrels. FOR LUCK TODAY WEAR: OR USE: Pale Yellow, 5, Topaz.

BIRTHDAY FORECAST: Better face the fact that progress during the next 12 months will be a stormy affair. From beginning to end of your birthday year you are promised an exciting time. You make friends who appear intensely devoted and at the same time may find that you have new enemies. In your business life achievement is at the cost of much controversy.

It is possible that you may be the victim of slander-mongers, but you will be well equipped to get the better of them. Don't hesitate to face up to your enemies, to unmask gossipers to be outspoken. Storms are likely to clear the air whereas silence would be misinterpreted.

Although in business you may feel the odds are against you from time to time, by the end of the year you should have achieved a good deal. Don't make unnecessary changes if you can avoid them. You will probably be more successful if you stay in the job and environment you are in at present.

Accident risk is rather high so be careful, particularly if you handle tools or drive a car. Your own health should be good but that of an elderly person in your circle may cause anxiety from time to time.

Within the family you will find it hard work getting on the right side of older people. Relatives both of your own generation and of your parents' are likely to be slightly hostile. But in spite of opposition, difficulties and quarrels you should find a good deal of happiness this year and also acquire more peace than you had formerly.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 23: FOR MOST OF US: Although the day may begin with delays and disappointment, energising conditions prevail most of the time. Contact people who may be useful to you. FOR LUCK TODAY WEAR: OR USE: Bright Yellow, 1, Diamond.

BIRTHDAY FORECAST: For the first few months of your birthday year you are likely to feel restricted and frustrated. Dependents and the family will make heavy claims upon you between now and Easter. Also, business progress may be slower than you expected.

There is little you can do about such restrictions during the next months. But plan to start out on something new and to get clear of hampering ties about July next. If you are persevering and enterprising you should be able to arrange satisfactory changes for late 1951.

Although ready money may be scarce during the early months of the year, your business conditions should improve steadily during the latter half of it. You will probably get a useful backer or make a contact with someone who is high up in your business or profession. August 1951 promises to be an important month for link-ups of this kind.

Take pains to keep well; you may feel devastated and out of sorts early in the year. Also, there is some likelihood of a bereavement among the older generation or anxiety over the health of a parent or elder relative.

Your friends and family will bring you as much worry as happiness this year and early in the 12 months you may feel disillusioned and dissatisfied. But as the year progresses happier times are likely and the revival of an old friendship about September next will lead to a much more cheerful existence next year.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 24: FOR MOST OF US: Be ready to revise today's plans at short notice. Some likelihood of windfalls or unexpected gains midday. Evening hours more cheerful than the early ones. FOR LUCK TODAY WEAR: OR USE: Rose Pink, 6, Turquoise.

BIRTHDAY FORECAST: During the year ahead you will have to face one or two disillusioning experiences. On the other hand, any resourcefulness and initiative that you may possess will have full play in 1950/51. By the time you are a year older you will probably be surprised by your own ability and success.

Better not make plans too rigidly.

Round about February you are likely to have a business disappointment and a surprise over your personal affairs. Complications may follow unless you are careful and straightforward yourself.

These ups and downs are not likely to affect your finances; indeed the coming year should be a more prosperous one than you have had for some time. But you will be constantly baffled about business conditions and the likelihood of changes and upsets in your environment or your particular line of work. In some way official regulations press heavily upon you in 1950-51.

Don't be tempted to travel although you will almost certainly get an opportunity to do so. Also don't take much heed of would-be advisers and critics. Your own good sense and your natural intuition will serve you better than other people's advice.

In personal life there is a curious time ahead. The years may begin with a disappointment or estrangement but will probably end on a happy note. So don't worry if the breaking up of a friendship or even engagement brings unhappiness at first. By the time you are a year older you will have made some link-up that restores your peace of mind and promises well for the years to come.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 25: FOR MOST OF US: Full Moon today and the likelihood of much activity in world and individual affairs. Don't postpone important decisions; make them before night. FOR LUCK TODAY WEAR: OR USE: Wine Red, 3, Amethyst.

BIRTHDAY FORECAST: Between now and Easter you may feel that you are wasting time, be somewhat restless and discontented. There is little likelihood of speedy progress in your career or of drastic changes in your personal affairs during the first six months of the year. But changes when they do come will be far-reaching in their effects.

So better prepare for drastic readjustments about April. Changes may have been in the offing before then but are not likely to come about until that month. When they do occur they will probably be largely in the nature of a surprise and more fortunate than you could have expected. Both finances and your way of living are likely to improve after April. Possibly you get a better job or find it possible to lead a more comfortable and leisurely existence. Certainly income should be a good deal better in the latter half of the year than it had been in the early months.

Take care of health, though, if you have been out of sorts of late there is a likelihood of marked improvement early in 1951. You may travel this year, but more probably would move house or go to another district.

In your personal affairs too there are changes ahead and at first you may find these distasteful. But if you face up to them courageously they should result in a more contented existence and in greater happiness next year. It is a good time for getting married, engaged, or extending family activities.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 26: FOR MOST OF US: Easy and progressive day. If you take advantage of opportunities about noon you should make money, be successful socially. FOR LUCK TODAY WEAR: OR USE: Royal Blue, 4, Diamond.

BIRTHDAY FORECAST: This is likely to be one of the easiest years you have had for a long time. Throughout 1950-51 life will move on comfortable lines, success comes almost without planning. True, there will be a few surprises in the coming 12 months and some anxiety about an older person, but no definite setbacks or disasters.

From a financial angle all is well this year. You lead a comfortable existence though you may not make spectacular gains. There is the likelihood of bonussing through windfalls, substantial presents, speculation. Socially, this might well be a highly important year. Don't hesitate to take the lead in some local activity or join a group or movement that appeals to you. If you have any interest in social or political matters it will probably be greatly intensified this year. Travel is probable but you would not settle away from home. There is the likelihood that you would move about in connection with your work or make extended holiday trips. If you do not go abroad then you will probably move about your own country more than usual.

It will be a year of interesting new friendships; oddly enough you are likely to make link-ups both with conventional people and bohemian types. Result should be a more comfortable existence and added happiness. There is not much likelihood of changes in the family circle although it still single this would be a good year for planning marriage.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 27: FOR MOST OF US: Day of surprises and old encounters. Worthwhile concentrating on new schemes. FOR LUCK TODAY WEAR: OR USE: Apple Green, 4, Emerald.

BIRTHDAY FORECAST: There are few indications in your birthday stars this year either for good or ill. On the whole this year of your life will be much what you make it. It is up to you to put a little extra drive and energy into anything that seems worthwhile.

As a general rule new schemes do better than those that have been dragging on for some time. So if you get a chance to strike out on original lines in business, take a more congenial job or generally re-organise your affairs, better do so. Months in which reshuffles would do well would be February and July.

Though the future may seem uncertain at times yet financial prospects are good. You may make a little extra in speculation though it would not be worth while risking large sums in that way. Any definite setbacks you have would occur through clashes with officials, tax collectors, local authorities.

There is some chance of travel, towards your next birthday and it would be worthwhile taking it. Whether or not you go abroad you would probably have a good deal to do with people overseas and one or two promising offers might come your way through contacts with foreigners. It is also probable that you would take a keen interest in overseas affairs or possibly study another language.

New friendships should mean a good deal to you in 1950-51. Existing ties are not likely to alter and, if still single, there seems little prospect of marriage this year. But both your ideas and your emotions will be stimulated by the link-ups you make in the first six months of 1951.

BIRTHDAY FORECAST: Events of 1950-51 will be important in that they lead to success in a year or two. But where immediate profits or triumphs are concerned, your outlook is disappointing. You are not likely to make much money or to create a sensation in your particular circle this year, but what you do in the coming 12 months will surely make for better times later.

It is an excellent period for starting out on some new course of study or training and for anything that will bring in profit in six to eight years time. If you have money to invest, put it into property or some safe and slowly maturing security. Don't on any account gamble or speculate this year.

Old friends and former associates should be very helpful to you in 1950-51. Someone with whom you lived or worked during the war period should be a great standby to you this year. In the family circle too you will find encouragement and backing if you need it.

Don't aim too high socially. If you do, you will be disappointed. Put your faith not in people with money and influence but in well tried friends. You will find that thoughtful and slow moving people are better company this year than socialites or gadabouts.

Happiness in 1950-51 may lie in the revival of an old friendship. If thinking of marriage link up with someone you have known for a few years rather than with a new friend. But in all doubts and difficulties in the coming 12 months you can count upon the older people in your family and on associates eight or 16 years older than you are.

There is some chance of travel, towards your next birthday and it would be worthwhile taking it. Whether or not you go abroad you would probably have a good deal to do with people overseas and one or two promising offers might come your way through contacts with foreigners. It is also probable that you would take a keen interest in overseas affairs or possibly study another language.

RUSSIA AND SATELLITES MEETING ON GERMANY Molotov in Prague

London, October 20. M. Vyacheslav Molotov, Soviet Deputy Prime Minister and former Foreign Minister, arrived in Prague today to attend a conference of Foreign Ministers of all the "People's Democracies" and the (East) German Democratic Republic, Moscow Radio announced tonight.

They will discuss the question of remilitarisation of Germany. The Radio said that the meeting would deal with the "decision of the three Western Foreign Ministers in New York to re-arm Western Germany."

The conference was called on the initiative of the Soviet Government and opened today, Moscow Radio said. Those attending in addition to M. Molotov are the Czechoslovak Vice-Premier, Rednek Fierlinger, the East German Foreign Minister, Georg Dertinger, the Hungarian Foreign Minister, Gyula Kallai, the Rumanian Foreign Minister, Ana Pauker, the Polish Foreign Minister, Zygmund Modzelewski, the Bulgarian Foreign Minister, Minitelio Neich, and the Albanian Ambassador to Moscow, Mr. Natanalli. Moscow radio said that M. Fierlinger, representing the host country, opened the conference and was elected chairman for the first day's session.

Russia had earlier announced today that she "will not tolerate" measures aimed at the revival of the German regular army in the Western zones.

This was contained in a declaration to the United States, British and French Governments denying charges that the "People's Police" in East Germany was a military formation.

According to Tass, the Soviet news agency, Russia in her reply, counter-charged that police in the Western zone were "in essence" military units.

This Russian reply was forwarded to the American, British and French embassies yesterday, Tass said.

Adenauer's call

In Goslar, Germany, today the West German Chancellor Dr. Konrad Adenauer, called upon Germans to shoulder their share of the burden in the common defence of Europe against Russian aggression.

"Security, even if it means a certain burden for the West German Republic, is better than destruction," he told the annual congress of his powerful party, the Christian Democratic Union, convening in Goslar, near the Russian zone border.

But Dr. Adenauer emphatically denied that his Government had ever committed itself to German remilitarisation. "Nobody has asked for such commitments," the Chancellor emphasised, "No offer has been made, either."

This was apparently an answer to rising opposition within his party complaining about the alleged readiness of Dr. Adenauer to re-arm Germany. This opposition only recently climaxed in the resignation of Dr. Gustav Heinemann, the West German Minister of the Interior, who charged that the Chancellor had

Conscription plans in East Germany

Berlin, October 20. Soviet zone Parliamentarians began overhauling their year-old constitution today to permit the legal introduction of military conscription in 1951.

The East German move came on the heels of Moscow's denunciation of the Western powers for alleged plans to remilitarise West Germany. Associated Press.

Unified army only

Dr. Adenauer revealed for the first time that he was called on the telephone in September from the New York conference of the Big Three Western Foreign Ministers and asked his opinion on the remilitarisation of Germany.

The Chancellor said he replied that the question of remilitarisation could only be decided by the West German Parliament. Dr. Adenauer did not disclose the name of the caller from New York, but the American delegation took the lead there in arguing that German contributions would be needed to defend the West against the threat of Communist aggression.

Dr. Adenauer said that the question of forming German troops contingents within a European army had been discussed among the Atlantic pact countries in connection with the problem of where to set up the defence line against Russia.

The German Government representatives in the European Assembly had thereupon agreed to support the idea of a unified European army under a unified European command and democratic control, he said.

But the German delegates had rejected the idea of a separate German army, Dr. Adenauer asserted.

Dr. Adenauer pledged solemnly that the "Federal Government, the Bundestag (Parliament) and I personally will do everything within our power to see that the militaristic thinking, which had its sharpest expression during the National Socialist (Nazi) time, will never return under any circumstances."

He said this in commenting on fears expressed by some foreign quarters that German participation in a European army might revive German militarism. Reuter, Associated Press and United Press.

In tents

London is now preparing—at the moment rather feverishly—for the most perplexing role of host to Festival of Britain visitors.

There are many problems ahead. The major one is accommodation. A review of available accommodation here in 1951 has already convinced the Festival authorities that the "house full" notices will be up in every hotel in London next year. So alternative and unorthodox means of housing guests have to be found.

Tented camps in the open is one way of easing the difficulty. This has now been accepted, and it is safe to say that quite a proportion of the 100,000 provincial and foreign visitors who will need accommodation every night in London will find it under canvas.

Moderate cost

The idea of sleeping in a tent may not go down well with intending visitors. But what can the Festival authorities do? They have tried every other way.

A site at Crystal Palace has been earmarked for the camps. Tents will be provided in most cases and caravans will be available. Essential services will be laid on.

But what if the camp runs out of tents and caravans? Even that will be taken care of. Sites will be available for those who bring their own tents.

Will provincial visitors, who are expected to form the bulk of the camping community, be content with this type of hospitality? The planners are dubious, but say: "Hikers, campers and students, and probably many people in the lower income groups will welcome the opportunity of getting this accommodation at a moderate cost."

Customers are not expected to be wholly confined to provincial visitors however. It is hoped that American students will take advantage of the scheme.

Underground

Then again the old standby may be pressed into service—the deep air-raid shelters at Clapham.

Whether or not visitors will appreciate "underground" hospitality is something the authorities can only guess at. Optimistically it is being said that Americans might like the novelty of being able to say when they return home that they slept in a London air-raid shelter.

Clapham shelter, of course, is a shelter with a difference. Below it may look rather like the deck of a troopship, but it is known here as London's deepest "hotel".

All sorts of communities have dwelt there—youth hostellers, Boy Scouts, children in transit for holidays overseas, Jamaican seamen, soldiers and sailors on leave—and even conference delegates.

There are 3,000 beds there. And

LONDON LETTER

House of Commons opening

Stately Westminster Hall has at the moment, anything but a stately appearance because of the large-scale preparations being made for the opening of the new House of Commons on Thursday. From the date in the historic hall the King, accompanied by the Queen and in the presence of representatives of all the Commonwealth Parliaments, will perform the ceremony. It has to take place there because His Majesty cannot under the Constitution enter the House of Commons in session. A Buckingham Palace reception is being held on the eve of the opening.

Westminster Hall is having an extensive "spring cleaning", hence the scaffolding. Wooden platforms are being erected on both sides to accommodate the guests. Some of the renovations cannot be completed in time. At the entrance to St. Stephen's Hall coloured drapings will hide the scars of war and time. Centuries-old statues are being freshened up and replaced in their niches.

When the Members come back they will find a new, post-office ready for their use in the inner lobby, near the door to the rebuilt House. It is paneled in oak to match the style of the new House, but because of space restrictions is arranged on three floors.

Members and their secretaries will have an almost daily delivery of their mail by means of a chute connecting the sorting office with the counter. Microphones and loudspeakers will announce the names of callers as they approach.

Royal party

Speakers of Dominion Parliaments and other distinguished visitors will be receiving invitations from the King and Queen to a Buckingham Palace reception the day before the opening of the new House of Commons.

It is likely to be an evening party with both the Princesses, who will be at the ceremony, in attendance.

The King and Queen may pay a private visit to the new House before the opening to see the glitz from overseas which are now being put into position. These presents will probably receive a special mention in His Majesty's speech at the opening.

Royal Mews

The official announcement that the King and Queen will drive in state to Westminster to open the new session of Parliament means four weeks of preparation and activity in the Royal Mews behind Buckingham Palace.

The Irish coach will almost certainly be used with a team of four of the last of the Windsor Greys, but the carriages of the Cornish, the Duke of Devon, the Duke of Gloucester, the Duke of Kent, etc., will be harnessed by chestnuts. The teams have to be carefully selected. The mews come under the direction of the Crown Equerry, who works as the executive of the Master of the Horse, the Duke of Beaufort. There are now only about 30 horses left in the mews, where there used to be a hundred. And that makes the forming of teams more difficult.

The King's horses in wet weather are exercised in the great riding school in Buckingham Palace Road. To accommodate them to uniform, the Grooms are swung from the roof. And each team has to be specially trained in this way before they go out in the streets for rehearsal with the heavy Royal bracks.

Finishing touches

So far very few people have had the privilege of inspecting the new House of Commons except those who are employed there in some capacity or another or those who have been concerned in the ventilation and other experiments.

The stage of finishing touches has now been reached and already the new debating Chamber seems to be a very pleasant place, well ventilated and lighted and in every way studying the comfort of Members, journalists, officials and visitors. As far as possible it reproduces faithfully the old House of Commons destroyed in the blitz.

But it differs in two respects. First there is a good deal more carving and other ornamentation on certain parts of the House and the furnishings are on a more elaborate scale, thanks to the contributions of the Dominions and the Colonies.

Not one part of the Commonwealth has failed to send something to the new House. Australia has sent the Speaker's chair. Queensland the "walnut" flooring. Canada the table. India the entrance door. Ceylon the "Serjeant-at-Arms" chair and New Zealand the two dispatch boxes.

I am told that the ventilation experiments have been extremely satisfactory. Air is drawn out above ceiling and near floor level while fresh air is admitted horizontally at the sides.

The conditions aimed at are those of a fine spring out-of-doors—temperature—65 degrees by day and 70 degrees at night.

Additional accommodation is provided for strangers and journalists by increasing the number of seats in the new debating Chamber to 915. There were only 744 in the old one.

Left-wing triumph

There can be no mistaking the political trend of the Labour Party at the Magdalen Conference, which has just concluded.

Both by vote and voice the emphasis has been consistently towards the Left. For the third year running Mr. Aneurin Bevan tops the vote for the National Executive and, while several moderates have been defeated, a number of Left Wing disciples, including Mr. Ian Vickers, have been elected.

The conference has also given emphatic endorsement to a full-blooded policy of "wealth equalisation." Feeling ran strongly in favour of still heavier taxation of profits, though much less strongly in favour of a wage freeze.

A readjustment of wages for lower paid workers was sympathetically regarded by Mr. James Griffiths from the official rostrum.

If the Magdalen proceedings have any influence in Cabinet decisions, it would seem likely that the Government's programme for the next Parliamentary session may be much more ambitious than expected.

Royal history

History will be made if, as is being rumoured here, Prince Charles accompanies his mother by air to Malta when she visits her husband later this year.

Early in October the Duke of Edinburgh will be taking his ship, HMS Mauretia, to sea again. After the Duke's return from that trip it is possible that Princess Elizabeth and Prince Charles may fly to be with him in the house that they have taken over from Earl Mountbatten.

If the trip is made in this fashion, Prince Charles will be the first Royal baby to fly.

Winston's jubilee

Half a century ago the rough Lancashire collier's son, Winston Churchill, was elected as the first junior Minister in the Conservative Government.

He has fought 18 elections, been defeated in five of them, held most important offices under the Crown, introduced five Budgets, spent 10 years in the political wilderness as a Conservative, and put the radio microphone on the statesman's map; lost his appendix and won universal affection.

Perhaps the secret of his physical and mental schoolboy complexion at 76 has been a heavy marriage and a tranquil domestic life.

Winston has enjoyed every moment of his life and every turn of fortune, but confesses he would not wish to repeat the experience. "I might not be so lucky next time," he comments.

Raphael cartoons

Seven Raphael cartoons, lent by the King, are once more on view at the Victoria and Albert Museum.

This is the first time these fascinating works of a great master—among the most important surviving examples of high Renaissance art—have been shown since 1939.

A special brick-built air-conditioned shelter, constructed for their protection, against enemy air attacks, as they were too large and fragile to be transported out of London.

They have survived undamaged and will be seen to better advantage than ever, as a spacious and well-lighted court has been specially modified to house them.

Ten such cartoons, commissioned by Pope Leo X as designs for tapestries and mainly illustrating episodes in the lives of St. Peter and St. Paul, were designed by Raphael in 1515-16, hung on ceremonial occasions in the Sistine Chapel, and sent to Brussels, where Pieter van Aelst wove from them the original tapestries now in the Vatican.

Winston Churchill appeals to France

London, October 20.

Mr. Winston Churchill, speaking at a Service's re-union here tonight, hoped that France would not become an obstacle to the idea of a common defence for Western Europe. Britain's wartime Prime Minister said that a Western defence front without Germany was impossible.

HOOVER PLAN FOR ALLIANCE

New York, October 20.

Mr. Herbert Hoover, former President of the United States, said in a broadcast last night that the United States should form an alliance with Britain and an armed Japan, if Western Europe and the United Nations did not mobilise effectively for their own defence. In a broadcast, the 76-year-old Republican ex-President declared that the United States should provide no more money or arms for the defence of Western Europe until a definitely unified and sufficient European army is in sight.

Western Europe must provide most of its own defence against Communism, Mr. Hoover said.

He warned that the United States could not indefinitely stand the economic drain of bolstering everywhere against Russia.

He asked the democratic nations of the world to specify what they will join with and when in a united military and economic front against communism.

"We should say at once that the United States, with all its resources, cannot long endure the present drain on our economy," he said.—Reuter.

New Cabinet in Israel

Tel Aviv, October 20. Informed political sources believed today that the Mapai leader, David Ben Gurion, might head another coalition Government similar to the one which resigned on Sunday. The Progressive Party leader, Dr. Pinhas Rosen, who was asked by President Chaim Weizmann to form a new Cabinet, has been negotiating with Ben Gurion and other political leaders and will probably be able to name a Government headed by Ben Gurion by Sunday.—United Press.

Chinese mission in Manchester

Manchester, October 20.

Four members of a Chinese goodwill mission arrived here today from London to tell what is happening now in Communist China.

They insisted that their two-day visit was to be non-political. The delegates are headed by Mr. Liu Ning-i, Vice-Chairman of the four-million strong All-China Federation of Labour.

He said here today that he was annoyed at reports describing them as a "Communist delegation." Asked if any of the delegates were members of the Communist Party, he said: "There is no need to give the political views of any."

"China wants peace," he said, "and we oppose American imperialist aggression in Korea and Formosa."

Though the delegation was primarily on a mission of goodwill to mark the Chinese Republic's first anniversary, the delegates were also interested in promoting trade between Britain and China.

Mr. Liu said that China needed British machinery and textiles and could send in return foodstuffs, particularly grain and soya flour. "We think the people of Britain are really very friendly to China," he said.

The delegates were met by the newly-formed Manchester branch of the British-Chinese Friendship Association, which invited the delegation to Britain, members of the Chinese Institute, University students and several representatives of the Communist Party.

They addressed students and staff at Manchester University and are to visit a cotton mill.

In London Mr. Liu had said at a Press conference "That is Chinese territory just as Scotland is part of Great Britain."

The delegation has seven members in all. Mr. Liu said in reply to a question that his delegation had no official contact with the British Government "because we are a people's delegation."—Reuter.

SEX APPEAL IN FILMS ATTACKED

New Delhi, October 21.

The President of India, Dr. Rajendra Prasad, said here today that if he had the power he would stop all films with sex appeal being shown in India.

Such films, he declared, "play havoc in our society."

The President was opening a conference organised by the Indian branch of the Association for Moral and Social Hygiene, an international organisation which aims at the eradication of commercialised vice.—Reuter.

PRELIMINARY MOVE TO ADMIT CHINA TO UN

Lake Success, October 20.

The United Kingdom moved today to secure a General Assembly decision that would permit admission of Communist China to the United Nations.

Sir Frank Soskice, British Solicitor-General, proposed in the Assembly's ad hoc Political Committee that the decision be based exclusively on which government, Nationalist or Communist, exercises effective control over all or most of the territory of China.

The Committee is debating a Cuban proposal setting forth a series of four rules under which the organisation should recognise the right of governments to representation in the United Nations.

Sir Frank objected to the four rules proposed in the Cuban resolution, arguing that the only principle should be that the government to be recognised should be one that controls all or nearly all the territory of the country concerned and commands the obedience of the people.

He pointed out that use of the principle of effective control would not imply approval of the policies of any government, but merely recognition of facts. If the four principles urged by Dr. Francisco Garcia Amador of Cuba were to be employed, difficulties might arise in attempting to determine whether a given government respected human rights and was created by the consent of the people—two of the requirements asked in the Cuban motion.

Dr. Amador formally submitted to the ad hoc Committee this morning a motion whereby the Assembly could decide the right of representation of any certain delegation without impairing the right of individual member nations to decide whether to recognise the government concerned.

The British delegate said it would be idle for the Committee to close its eyes to the fact that its decision would affect the question of Chinese representation, but he warned that it must keep in mind that it would be laying down a general principle that would be used in future similar cases which might arise.

British warning

"There are many governments represented here that have found it necessary to change their governments, sometimes by violence," said Sir Frank. "An impossible state of affairs would be created if recognition were to be withheld from such States."

Sir Frank also stressed that a difference should be made between admission of a new State and recognition of the government of a State already a member of the United Nations. If a set of principles were set up to govern recognition stricter than those required for admission to the UN, he warned, it would mean in effect denying to a country already admitted its right to represent people under its jurisdiction in the world organisation.

Earlier, Mr. Liu Chieh of China had enthusiastically supported the Cuban draft.

The British delegation later circulated a resolution recommending that "where the question of representation of a member State arises in consequence of internal processes or changes which have taken place in that State, the right of the government to represent a member State in the United Nations should be recognised if that government exercises effective control and authority over all or nearly all national territory and has the obedience of the bulk of the population of that territory, in such a way that this control, authority and obedience appear to be permanent."

The British motion assigns to the General Assembly the task of deciding on questions of representation based on this principle, but also allows other UN organs to arrive at independent decisions when the Assembly is not in session. It also provides that any decision on the issue of representation shall not affect the direct relations of individual member States with the State concerned.

In London, authoritative quarters said that Britain and the United States are rapidly ironing out their differences over problems of Far Eastern policy.

British and American views on long-term Far Eastern developments had been greatly synchronised during the past few weeks and are getting closer still. A further narrowing down of the gap was expected to follow from Mr. Truman's latest meeting with General MacArthur, although by slow stages.

The chief point of difference remains the approach to Communist China, which Britain recognises, Britain's advice to the United States is not to antagonise China and to avoid in all circumstances any steps that would drive her into the arms of the Soviet Union.

Authoritative British quarters emphasise that the Western democracies have good reason to draw considerable encouragement from the latest reactions in the Far East to the Korean conflict. According to the British view, developments were said to have disproved plans of a united Asiatic front against the West.

Instead, many Asiatic nations have supported the West in the United Nations. China, in the British view, is not a satellite of the Soviet Union but is cautiously manoeuvring to establish her own position in the concert of the United Nations.

Britain maintains that her early recognition of the Peking regime was a wise move dictated by a policy of realism which does not necessarily mean approval of the Red regime. The British believe the Red regime is the one step that will encourage China to retain a comparatively free hand as to which way she will ultimately go—with the Kremlin or on a middle-of-the-way course. The belief is growing here that the United States will eventually come around to this view.—United Press.

British officials said this would put a stop to the Labour Government's "Welfare State" programme.

The new Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Hugh Gaitskill, told American officials during a recent visit to the United States that more arms spending was needed to switch to wartime economy.

The resignation of ailing Stafford Cripps, whose name has been synonymous in Britain with austerity, is not expected to cause any change in the economic policy.

Mr. Gaitskill told newsmen that he had no best to see that defence are built up and that economic recovery is maintained. Pressures for wage increases, critical, and soaring world prices are making it difficult to hold down British prices, even subsidies.

Mr. Gaitskill takes over from Sir Stafford at a very difficult time. The period of Marshall aid is running to an end. On paper, Britain is in better shape than any time since before the war, but she is not. Her reserves and gold and dollar demands for more and more defence expenditures are only standing. Britain has promised to spend $9,520,000,000 on defence during the next three years, but she has decided she will be able to do with a lot less, perhaps half that amount.

British officials said there was absolutely no possibility of increasing the $9,520,000,000 armaments programme and still maintain a peace-time economy. Increased spending would require conversion to wartime economy with the re-establishment of many more controls and would not only stop Welfare State Socialism but would also be a cutback for many of the Socialist State projects.—United Press.

The Department added that the case of the two American officials was an example of the petty harassment to which American officials are subjected by the public authorities in countries of the Soviet orbit.—United Press.

Washington, October 20. The United States has filed two strong protests with the Rumanian Foreign Office against the detention of an American military officer and American diplomatic attaché, the State Department disclosed today.

It said the protests were sent after Lieutenant-Colonel Franklin Rothwell, U.S. military attaché in Rumania, and Mr. Garrison Mason, U.S. Legation attaché, were detained in September at Urziceni under armed guard for six hours, during which time they were not allowed to communicate with the Legation. Urziceni is a small town about 30 miles from Bucharest and does not come within the area described by the Rumanian Government as restricted.

'Red China no Communistic'

Louisville, Kentucky, October 20.

Red China is not Communist and should be admitted to the United Nations, Madame Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit, Indian ambassador to the United States, said here.

She said: "We think China outside the United Nations is a much greater threat to the framework of the United Nations."

She added there were many professed Communists in the Chinese Government, but the Chinese people are not Communist by any means.

China's Government is a coalition including all points of view, including that of the Kuomintang. It is not by any means even leftist.—United Press.

Plymouth's other long-established firms were ploughing a similarly rough road. And plough it they did, unyielding; so that today these traders' names are scattered over the town like confetti.

Beanfeast at Blackpool

One political observer, reporting from Blackpool recalled Mr. Balfour's remark to the effect that he would as soon take advice on a policy from his valet as from a Tory Party Conference. But he failed to mention that the philosophical statesman had added that he nevertheless felt bound, out of simple courtesy, to listen to both.

In Conservative history it has very seldom been unsafe for a Party leader to ignore unacceptable counsel or currents of opinion from the rank and file.

Leader is absent

In fact, the leader does not listen to the conference, which he does not even attend, and is only required to take note of what has passed. This arrangement has many advantages, as Mr. Attlee would not doubt have admitted, which must have commended it to Mr. Churchill when he decided in 1940 to become Leader of the Tory Party, knowing that only thus could he retain the political initiative which the accident of war had at last granted him. In fact, right up Mr. Churchill's street.

In a passage from the latest volume of his memoirs, in which he describes the stresses and strains operating at a given moment in the midst of his War Cabinet, he tells us that "all I wanted was compliance with my wishes after reasonable discussion."

The conditions of this not over-modest demand have been handsomely met by the Tory Party for some years past, though the knowledge of politicians that they are ultimately bound to comply may have rather too often curtailed discussions which might sometimes have proved useful as well as reasonable.

The awe in which most Tory chiefs stand of their leader may have hampered in many ways the effectiveness of the Opposition since 1945. But it has emphatically not hampered the gradual emergence of a vigorous party in the country filled with a youthful and sometimes even naive enthusiasm, and very different in its aspect from the Tory Party which was defeated five years ago.

Lord Woolton and all those who have worked with him have done a lot to make it a truly National Party. They may not yet have done as much as they would wish, but the progress is there and noticeable.

The Labour Party has never been a class party in its composition, yet it has never been a National Party in its outlook. The Tories became too identified in the public mind with the wealthier middle classes and the composition of its annual conferences up till quite recently amply confirmed this unfortunate impression. Even now, despite the fact that from outward appearances the only way to distinguish between Labour and Tory Conferences is to know that the latter are larger, the presence of a few active and vocal working men and women is regarded as a phenomenon.

Not policy-making

A real working housewife, as opposed to one of the League variety, is cheered to the echo whatever she has to say. And although one in seven of the representatives are supposed to be trade unionists, each one to reach the rostrum becomes a seven-day marvel.

The party certainly does not seem to have digested the implications of Sir David Maxwell Fyfe's claim that it is supported by 3,000,000 trade unionists. It is perhaps fortunate that the conference is not a policy-making body. For one thing, it is far too large and unwieldy; 4,000 representatives responsible only to themselves, can be wrong. On the first day its vastness contrived to deaden some already dull discussions, while on the second the representatives attempted to raise the temperature all too successfully and combined in noisy claque to stam-

Useless people

The representatives were not always as democratic in their doctrine as in their procedure, which was at times liberal to the point of anarchy. Too many of them seemed in need of a good grounding in traditional English Liberalism before they could be trusted to give useful advice on the urgent problems of the Communist danger. Fortunately, there was Mr. Harold Macmillan to put the matter into saner perspective.

Nevertheless, the general contrast between the sectarian bitterness at Margate and the broader view of the average Tory was exhilarating. Not since "vermin" and "tinker's cuss" has any Socialist politician infuriated the Tories as Mr. Morrison did with his remark about "useless people." As many Blackpool speakers pointed out, it is almost solely on the "useless peoples" that the Socialists are now counting for the more disagreeable implementation of the rearmament and defence plans.

There is a time lag in politics, and the Tories have not been able to grasp, any better than the Socialists, some of the nastier implications of these plans. But it was a good thing for all that the conference should have asserted itself on the subject of housing.

It is not altogether impossible that a target figure of 300,000 houses a year might be within reach, even with a rearmament programme, especially now that the dollar shortage is so much diminished. And evidence of urgent Tory interests in this most desperate of social and political problems is badly needed at a time when the Socialists are ceaselessly making the most unscrupulous propaganda out of Mr. Churchill's preoccupation with defence policy.

Propaganda today is at its most effective when reduced to the simplest terms, since its largest consumers are the simplest minded.

Calling Tories warmongers, the Socialists find, is a rewarding political game, to which an effective answer will have to be found by Lord Woolton's canvassers.

The function of Tory conferences is to give the constituency workers a sense of participation at the top which will send them back with heightened morale for another year's hard work. It is very difficult to see how it can achieve anything else in its present form, without resorting to the despised card vote system of its opponents.

It is too big

Indeed, it is likely to become more and more of an annual outing or beanfeast and less of a serious political conference unless its size is reduced. But it can by chance happen on the important theme of the moment which needs to be in the Party's mind.

This year it was undoubtedly the growing signs of a split between trade unionism and the Labour Party. There is an admirable opportunity for trade unionism to reassert itself and see that it has no future in a non-Capitalist society.

But the Tory Party needs more men who can understand the working-class mentality and obtain the ear of the industrial voter. It needs better trade unionist Tories and more of them in the House of Commons.

The conference seemed to understand the urgency of this need. But it remains to be seen whether the constituencies and the Central Office will be able to follow through.

INDUSTRIES FOR DENMARK

Denmark, described in any travel book as an agricultural country may soon become largely industrialised.

In a report from Copenhagen correspondent James White points out that, for several years, Denmark has been producing and exporting more and more industrial goods. Today, nearly one third of the country's exports are of an industrial nature and during the first six months of this year such exports totalled 24 per cent more than during the same period in 1949. The problem now facing the Danes is how to maintain the new trend.

At heart Denmark is still a nation of farmers and the average Dane still prefers foreign machine-made goods to any produced at home. This is particularly so in the case of machine and hand tools and many Danish tradesmen insist on Swedish-made tools rather than either British or Danish products. Similarly Denmark's textile industry is regarded as only a temporary one, "making do" until textiles from Britain can be imported freely again.

The experts who believe in Denmark's new industrial prosperity have no intention of giving up the struggle so easily however. Their zeal has even spread to the Danish fashion world and for the first time ever last month Copenhagen saw an all-Danish fashion world and for the first time ever last month Copenhagen saw an all-Danish fashion parade.

Denmark may not yet be able to challenge Paris as a world fashion centre or produce an industrial hub like Manchester. The will is there, however, and the go-ahead Danes may very shortly find a way.

Before the war Plymouth had no light industry and, therefore, nowhere where an appreciable number of women could earn a decent wage packet. Now a few factories are springing up. A radio manufacturer has one, and another I visited is a mass-production dress factory.

The chairman and driving force of this dress firm is Leslie Barker, who is, in the first instance, an engineer and not a dressmaker.

Undoubtedly it is due to his precision thinking that the factory has sprung from nothing to the employment of 1,000 people in two years. The firm claim theirs is the largest factory of dresses in the world.

I saw 1,200 sewing machines "paying for themselves," as they say, and found them surprisingly quiet.

Eventually the firm plan to have non-profitmaking shops, and also washing machines, all on the site, for the workers.

Plymouth has some of the best-looking recent houses I have seen in recent years. They are rather Dutch looking, with mansard roofs of grey or terra-cotta tiles. The upper storey of each house is tile-hung to match, the lower part being a shiny white.

We could not see everything of Plymouth in 24 hours; but the spirit which sent so many brave hearts sailing out from that harbour in past history is there still for anyone to see.

CHINA'S INTERESTS OVERSEAS

The return to Hong Kong from Formosa of the party of Chinese from Sumatra, headed by Mr. G. C. Saw, affords a reminder of the extreme importance of Chinese interests in South-East Asia. Recent events have tended to crystallize the gaze of the Peking leaders on the North, but no Chinese Government faithful to its trust can afford ever to forget the South Seas. This is certainly realised by the Nationalists. The Generalissimo told the visitors from Sumatra that the Nationalist Delegation had not opposed the entry of the Indonesian Republic into the United Nations—despite its recognition of the Peking regime—because he conceded the necessity of building up goodwill between the Indonesians and the Overseas Chinese in that country.

The fatal flaw in the Communist policy for the Far East is that if, under Chinese aid and sympathy, it succeeded in its aims in Malaya, Indonesia and Indo-China, the very foundation of Chinese influence and prosperity would vanish overnight. This vital fact ought to be impressed upon Peking in season and out of season. It is a balancing factor that ought to weigh with all others in the supreme calculations of Chinese policy. And until it has been given its full and proper weight in the decisions of the Central Government it ought at least to be the major element in a greater elasticity of policy in the Southern coastal provinces.

We do not suppose the Chinese community in Korea got off very lightly in the short but devastating conflict there. Already Chinese in Indo-China are apprehensive as a result of the successes of the Vietminh in the North, and are sending their capital through the open market to Hong Kong. No doubt many are thinking of sending their dependents here as well, if it is possible to do so. It may be panicky, and to say the least of it premature, but it shows the nature of their fears.

The Chinese position in South-East Asia depends on the trade and enterprise of their countrymen. Many who went there in the most humble of capacities have grown rich and powerful by their own efforts and genius for commerce. True, the greater number of them remain in humble occupations. But if it is certain the cream of Chinese society would be skimmed off and their possessions lost to them, it is hardly less certain that under a Communist regime, or even under a hostile regime dominated by Malay and Javanese Nationalists, they too would suffer acutely or be shipped back by the thousands.

But great as is the indirect interest of any Chinese Government in the welfare and the good opinion of the Overseas Chinese, the direct interest is even greater. Before the war the remittances that came from them, amounting to more than $100 million annually, balanced China's trade. It was, and is, as indispensable an item in Chinese economy as the invisible exports have been for a century to the British. The eight millions or so who live in the South Seas probably represent an average per capita wealth far greater than that of any provincial community in China Proper or in Manchuria.

There is, in any event, no permanence in Communist in-

EXPERT IN THE BOX

What makes the Russians so awkward to deal with? Are they likely to become less awkward? If they do not, what will happen? These questions are asked by a man well qualified to give the answers. Sir Maurice Peterson was Ambassador to Moscow in the year—1946 to 1949—in which Soviet diplomacy was first blatantly revealed.

To his first question, Sir Maurice replies in his book, "Both Sides of the Iron Curtain," "The classic work which embodies Marxist-Leninist theory, to which Stalin himself has made considerable additions, leave the reader in no doubt that the Marxist State is to be regarded as an irreconcilable conflict with the 'bourgeois', 'capitalist', or 'imperialist', world—terms which in Soviet mouths have been so much modified by the development of what we call Socialism.

Interludes in the conflict are recognised as a matter either of necessity or of tactics. But there can be no permanent cessation until one or the other goes under. Is this likely to change? Sir Maurice sees no sign of a change either from above or below; but does see in past experience, a possibility that Soviet Communism may change its positions without changing its spots. The important thing, it appears, is not to change the label. Call private enterprise Communism, as Stalin has in some respects already done, and you have changed without the aid of deviationism. But this is only for the purpose, and to surmount the difficulties, of the moment.

Under pressure of circumstances, Sir Maurice thinks, there might be a change of policy which would "open the way to a real modus vivendi between East and West." But when the circumstances became less pressing?

Hopes crushed at conference

Sir Maurice does not rate the risk of war very highly, "provided that reasonable stability and reasonable vigilance are maintained in the West." Soviet propaganda is maintained not so much to incite the public to war as to teach them to expect it.

Why? "If the Soviet citizenry can be convinced that here is a perpetual menace from outside they will be even less inclined than they are normally to question the proceedings of their rulers. Thus it is the first principle of Soviet domestic policy to create the impression of an external crisis."

Which gives point to Mr. Churchill's declaration: "The Soviet fear our friendship more than our enmity."

All the hopes with which Sir Maurice went to Moscow—"I was convinced that an understanding could be achieved"—were "crushed" at the Foreign Ministers' Conference held there a year later.

The four years of his Moscow Ambassadorship lead only to the advice to the West: "Be vigilant. Keep on the alert."

He finds no other advice possible, after sincere attempts to

By

invoke the good will of Stalin, Molotov, Vyshinsky, and what he calls the high priests of the Communist faith.

Concern to keep Spain neutral

Sir Maurice had arrived at Moscow via Madrid. He was appointed Ambassador to Spain early in 1939, when it was decided to give recognition to the new Spain under Franco.

Britain, like France, who had sent Marshal Petain to the French Embassy there, was concerned to keep Spain at least neutral in what everybody accepted was the coming war with Germany.

The outbreak of war found sympathy with the Axis intense, but Sir Maurice had no apprehension that Spain would at once ally herself with Germany. She was worn out by the agony through which she had passed; had every inducement for remaining neutral, and none for abandoning her neutrality.

He chides Mr. Churchill for showing undeserved gratitude to Franco for refraining from declaring war on the Allies, "for," he asks "how could Spain, with her vast, unprotected coast-line, dependent upon seaborne supplies for the most elementary needs of her reconstruction, permit herself to contemplate the commission of acts of open hostility against the merchant vessels and later the transports, of that one of the two warring powers which was unquestionably superior at sea?"

Reason for his recall

On the formation of the National Government under Mr. Churchill, Sir Maurice was recalled from Spain and replaced by Sir Samuel Hoare.

"It was only when Sam Hoare's name was mentioned," said, "that I was able to form some idea of the real reason for

THE COMMONWEALTH AND ASIA

Today, when so large a part of the world's affairs is concerned with aggression and defence, destruction and negation, it is refreshing to note any oases of international activity which are purely constructive and aim not at conflict but at mutual aid.

Such an oasis is the Colombo Plan, which was carried a stage further recently by the recommendation of the Commonwealth Consultative Committee on South and South-East Asia, made at its London meeting.

ternationalism. So great a Chinese stake cannot be gambled on so insecure a premise. Nor can a Communist system anywhere be regarded as permanent. The satisfactions it may give at first may be a response to spiritual longings, but the end result is a satisfaction neither to the spirit nor to material well-being. The people are made poorer and stay poorer and the great values of human dignity and just pride, of freedom and power of choice, are ruthlessly removed from them and re-mitted to a tyrannical oligarchy. The alternative is the free way of life—or the historical transition from the proletariat to the might of the armed man and ultimately the Caesars.

Nor can it be said that the Chinese overseas have ever lost their sympathy and concern for the welfare of their forebears in China Proper. It was from them that the main Chinese inspiration came, and the most enthusiastic support, for the Republican Revolution. The leaders of the Chinese community in Malaya are against the jungle Communists for very good and eminently sensible reasons. And no community has suffered more brutally than the Chinese at the hands of the singularly cruel fanatics whose deeds reduce them, in the words of Pandit Nehru himself, to the level of the beasts.

The malaise which has afflicted the regime in Canton for so many months is passing, and there is a slow revival of the old familiar spirit

East together comprise about 600 million human beings, the great majority of whom are extremely poor by our standards and have progressed relatively little beyond the economies of the pre-machine age.

Within their bounds, nevertheless, and by the manual labour of their inhabitants, are produced nearly all the world's rubber and jute, and a high proportion of its tea and tin, besides large amounts of petroleum, rice, sugar, vegetable oils and other primary products.

The Colombo Plan was a Commonwealth project, and originated at the conference of Commonwealth Foreign Ministers held in the capital of Ceylon last January. Australia proposed it, and there was general satisfaction at the prospect of impor-

of energy and purpose among officials and people alike. A long and hard road has yet to be travelled to regain the prosperity of other days. Provincialism has gone never to return. But where permanent interests of great moment apply, the provincial authorities ought surely to substitute a lively and indisputable right for a vanished one—the right to a voice in high policy in the capital.

The destiny of the revolution is to create a synthesis of old and new, of East and West, and of all the isms and ideals of our tumultuous time. The Chinese in these parts have the right, indeed the absolute need, to look out to the seas and to the South, just as Peking has the right, and the inclination, to look northward to Manchuria. It is not impossible, surely, to look both ways, for if the leadership of the Treaty Port has gone, so also has the old landlocked isolation.

Indeed, it will be difficult in present circumstances for even the Commonwealth as a whole to provide enough. Other, American, capital must certainly be desired, though we can scarcely expect it to be forthcoming unless we ourselves viable do our utmost.

my recall. It would have been easier if someone had said that I must go because a job had to be found for Hoare. But no one did until, at the end, I had to say it for myself."

Hoare, he inters, could not be included in Churchill's Government because of Labour objections.

Curiously enough, Sir Maurice was the Foreign Office onlooker in the negotiations which preceded the Hoare-Laval proposals to end the Abyssinian war. Those proposals he stands by.

It was clear, he argues, that Britain would not go to war for Abyssinia, so it was up to him to do the best he could for that country.

As the public "conscience" was against the proposals he was left to tell the Ethiopian Minister: "Your country is now free to go on fighting as long as she feels able to, but she will fight alone."

Those who look back on pre-war history through the eyes of the 1945 victor must ask themselves who would have fought with Britain had she challenged the Axis in 1935 on the Abyssinian question.

Certainly not the United States (not even then in the League of Nations); very unlikely France; by no means probably, any of the sister countries of the Commonwealth.

Makers of Britain's foreign policy

The book, interesting for richness of material and frankness of narrative in many diplomatic spheres, closes with the startling suggestion that the chief permanent official of the Foreign Office should be recognised, not merely as the instruments, but as the makers of Britain's foreign policy.

These officials, he argues, should not be left "to the unseen eminence of the power behind the throne. It must be a recognized part of their position, and of their duty to render an account of their policy before a Select Committee of Parliament, if not indeed on the floor of either or both Houses."

There may be more in this than meets the eye. What meets the eye is the impossibility, under such a scheme, of ensuring the continuity of foreign policy.

It would involve, surely, Foreign Office staff changes with each change of Government, and indeed with each change of Foreign Minister, unless the difference between the staff and the Minister had been previously disclosed.

It would put Foreign Office positions into the party political market—like jobs for the boys.

Miss Russia would like to look smart too

By Dennis Bardens

If you have ever seen Russian propaganda pamphlets you will be familiar with the Russian conception of ideal womanhood.

She is a buxom, cheerful-looking young woman, usually in peasant costume, and with probably a sheaf of corn on her shoulder. Her face is turned upwards to the sky, as though symbolising the hope of youth in the future.

But, alas, is an artist's model who has never been near a farm. If she ever did, she would work long hours for wages which would be considered a disgrace in any European country.

But if you look through Soviet magazines you will find no variation between this young girl, with her adequate but uninspiring clothes and the "urban" Soviet women, whose outfit is so appallingly standardised as to be almost a uniform with its white blouses and shirt-style collar, the ill-fitting jacket of poor quality wool mixture, and the skirt that hangs as though it were a sack.

Little scope

Almost all women in the civilised world realise that individuality in dress and make-up adds excitement and interest to life. It is probable that Russian women do, too, for in every country and every period women have liked to make the best of themselves, to look as smart and attractive as possible.

But under Soviet Communism there is little scope to be gay, colourful, and "chic"—except for the wives and relatives of party bosses and Government officials.

Main reason for this, of course, is the extremely low standard of living. Clothing is so expensive that only months of saving and sacrifice can produce a cheap cotton frock or a shoddy pair of shoes, and the question of individual taste doesn't even arise, because all clothes are State-produced and retailed in State shops.

Take what's there

Woolen goods, though prohibitive in price, are rough and harsh to handle, poor in finish, dull and drab. Shoes are limited in range, poor in quality and totally lacking in style.

It is difficult for a Westerner, accustomed to buying what she pleases, where she pleases, to imagine such goods, but in Russia the consumer doesn't count. She takes what she's given, and has to like it.

Thus, in the Kharkov region, there is an epidemic of black hats and any other sort is almost unobtainable. In another region there is a glut of green scarves. Not only are colours drab, but the dyes are so poor that they are seldom fast. Coloured raincoats made by the Clara Tsetlin factory in Moscow are gayer in the humorous weekly Krokodil because, if you get caught in a shower, your dress or costume underneath is dyed the same colour.

"Chic," in the sense that the Western European understands the term, is totally unknown in Russia.

Tries her best

At "smart" parties you might see some of the privileged classes demonstrating what happens when culture and taste become sterile through isolation from the rest of the world.

Here is a plump woman wearing a heavy fur coat in the height of summer; here somebody wearing an ill-fitting "evening" gown in the afternoon accompanied by a pair of low-heeled shoes and a hat which is direct a pretty girl tip-toes her way in a "new-look" outfit which has long since gone out of fashion in the West.

The answer is that though those with money to burn can afford to flout the prevailing prejudice against being "they do try to achieve it. Some magazines are snapped eagerly, some changing in for enormous prices.

Printed patterns are laboriously traced from magazines, with endless hours of effort. Russian women, often work with the most unpromising materials, will make a desperate attempt to look smart and attractive.

I don't enter at this. The Russian woman, starved of anything that is different, attractive, beautiful, will, as one might expect, try to make the best things.

Like flour

Apart from clothing, about make-up. The same Communist prejudice against individuality in dress extends to cosmetics and toilet. Packing, presentation and quality of the goods themselves betray an utter lack of imagination. Face powders are, of course, almost like flour, a discriminating woman, then altogether.

Roses are of uniform taking no account of different coloured complexions. They are greasy and exude a unpleasant perfume.

Perfumes are considered incredible luxury in a country where the State concern has a monopoly. They are conceded, one having the inspiring title of "Kremlev." There used to be a perfume called "10,000 flowers," but when the Russians got to say that it smelled like tractor, the name was dropped.

What of other things—rooms for instance? In this poor Russia is nearly 100 million people, and a generous estimate puts proportion of Russian women with access to private bath at one in 2,000. The proposition of shared bathrooms is of 200.

No privacy

About 98 per cent of the population use public baths, which are perpetually overcrowded, make bathing a far from pleasant relaxation.

For the European woman visit to one of these public bathing establishments and their surly officials and lack of privacy would be an ordeal indeed.

In other items which Europeans take for granted—pajamas, combs, toothbrushes—such things—the degrading of Communist monopoly of goods, especially watches in Germany as "reparations"—all other parts of the Union are starved of things.

Even "Pravda" was moved to protest at their "ersatz" appearance. Moscow, of course, quite a good selection of goods, especially watches in Germany as "reparations"—all other parts of the Union are starved of things.

'Pin-ups'

One curious fact is that seldom sees any photograph of Russian women in bathing costumes—a motive perhaps done in European and American magazines. But the lack of "pin-ups" is not because of superior morals but because ill-fitting poor quality costumes would spoil the picture.

It would be a brave woman who would risk being photographed in one. From Vienna just after end of the war came reports which showed how women lost all dress sense when isolated from world fashion for long periods. They told Russian officers wives attend balls and other allied functions in nightdresses. Evening dress and night attire had become synonymous terms.

The life story told by a sofa

I am a lonely and unhappy sofa. I am now living in a big house with other furnitures. I am old and torn and dirty. Nobody will sit on me and take care of me. But I would never forget the happy days I had, when I was young. You know, I had travelled quite a lot and had much experience in this naughty world.

Boys and girls, would you like to hear the story of my life?

Well, more than ten years ago, I was born in a furniture shop in Peking. I was made of wood, cotton wool, springs, fine cases and woollen material. I must have my two younger brothers together, so as to make a set.

I stayed in this furniture shop for about a fortnight's time. Then in a fine afternoon a couple came into the shop. After some bargaining, this couple determined to buy me and my two younger brothers.

That same evening, my two younger brothers and I were moved into the sitting room of their house. After looking round, I found out that all the furnitures, such as the tables, chairs, cupboards were new. Though the house was decorated simply and plainly, yet it was clean and tidy.

After some time, I realized that this couple was a wedded pair and that the husband was a doctor and the wife was a professor. Both of them were kind to me and treated me well. They gave me a coat to wear, so as to keep my cleanliness.

Every evening, having done their daily work, this couple used to sit on me, reading newspapers and talking about national affairs. From their conversation I realized that they loved their country and that they were sorry to hear the Japanese had occupied some of the lands of their country.

One Sunday morning, after reading the newspaper, this couple became very nervous, for the Japanese were only twenty miles from Peking. After some discussion, they decided to leave Peking and moved to Shanghai and I was taken with them.

The life I led in Shanghai was not a peaceful one. For the Japanese aeroplanes always came to air raid Shanghai. Sometimes they even came at night and this couple never had a sound sleep.

Things went on in this way for a long time. Then suddenly the Japanese army drew near Shanghai. This couple had no time to think about me. They took all they could carry and left their house sorrowfully. Poor me! It was a pity that I could not walk, otherwise I would have followed them. Indeed I did not wish to live under these cruel Japanese.

A few days later, the Japanese occupied Shanghai. One day, several people came into this house. At first, I thought it was my master's arrival. But to my surprise, those were strangers. They were short, fat and not nice-looking men. I think you can guess who they are. They must be well known to all of you, the Japanese. There were four of them carrying guns and pistols. It seemed as if they wanted to inspect something. But after finding nothing was doubtful, they went away.

Two days afterwards, they came back with some more Japanese. This time they settled down.

Oh! how I hated these fellows! These Japanese treated me very cruelly. They took no care of me. They never washed my clothes, even though they were very dirty. They always sat on me, talking and discussing about fighting. They smoked while they were talking and they did not mind about the ashes dropping on me and burned my clothes.

Their language was very funny. Though I did not understand every word they spoke, yet I knew they were planning to do something against my country. I was sorry for my country and wished to do something good for her. But what could I do? I could not even move without the help of people, though I have legs and arms. If not, I would go and tell my country all that had happened here. But I could do nothing.

Sometimes these people came with beautifully and extravagantly dressed ladies. They always drank with them. While drinking, they played, laughed and joked with each other and acted cheaply and had dirty manners. Really, I could not stand to look at them, so I shut my eyes and let them play themselves.

They went on playing and laughing, until they got drunk and tired. Then they lay and slept on me with their heavy bodies. How tired and painful I was, pressing my body down for more than ten hours! If my mistress were there, I thought she must be very angry, seeing these cruel Japanese treating me like that. All of a sudden I was thinking of the safety of my master and my mistress. Perhaps they were killed during the war. Thinking at this point, I could not help my tears dropping down.

These unhappy days lasted for several years until one day it was declared that the war was over. Then the Japanese had to leave this house and go back to their country.

Before the Chinese soldiers came and took back this place, the thieves, the robbers and other bad people, using this occasion, robbed, seized, stole, killed and did many cruel things to the people. No doubt, I could not escape from their hands. I was taken away and sold to another family for a low price. This family was very noisy and had many children. Some of them were small and they jumped on me whenever they pleased. But in spite of their naughtiness, I loved them, because they were cute and lovely.

One day, this family held a dancing party. Among the guests, I saw a couple whom I had met before, but I could not think out who they were at that moment. By this time, this couple seemed to pay more attention to me. When the party was over I saw them speaking something to the host, while they were talking, they looked at me several times.

The next day, I was delivered to another house. Oh! that was the same house I had lived before! How happy I was to see my old master and mistress, and how joyful I was to see them coming back to their sweet home again! I was so happy that my tears shed.

As I had not seen them for many years, I found that they had two sons and a daughter. They are sweet and lovely. Their Dad and Mum love them dearly. You see, my coat was torn and old then, after using for such a long time. So they gave me a new coat and treated me carefully.

It seemed that I was by nature full of suffering. My happy and comfortable life only lasted for three years. Then revolution broke out in China again. They left Peking with their children and went to Hong Kong, leaving me alone in this house again.

I am afraid they would never return, unless the Communists away or the war stops. I think would never see them again, but I would never forget the kindness they had done to me. I would be no use even if I would like me. You see, I am old and torn and a rat has given me a bite and made a hole in my body; using my interior as a shelter, this harmful creature gave birth to five young ones. These tiny creatures grew fast and I could not stop them going out and coming in. I was no longer useful. I am now staying in this house, hoping that someone would come and take me away and use my material to make another sofa.

A picnic to the Peak

Last Saturday, I went with my friends to the Peak. It was about half past nine when we started. When we reached the Peak it was noon time and we ate bread and fruits. On the Peak we could see Hong Kong and Kowloon very clearly. We could see ships and motor-cars when we look down from the Peak. When it was five o'clock we took the tram and went home. # DIÀRIES

Our memories are not good enough to help us to remember so many things which happened to us months and months, years and years ago. So, if we do not want to forget anything which happened during our lifetime, we should keep a diary. A diary is really our own history — our autobiography.

A diary is also a daily record. So we must write it daily either wise or foolish. It is the events which happened during the day. But some people are very lazy they do not want to keep a diary. When they become old afterwards they may sometimes feel very lonely. They may try very hard to remember their childhood days to interest themselves, but in vain. Some people used to write their diary before going to bed. This is a good habit to keep a diary, so that we will not forget anything.

When we write a diary, the most important thing is to put down what we do not wish to forget and what we think will interest us in after years.

It is not very hard to keep a diary. It need not be written in stiff formal sentences. We can write the sentences as short as possible by using more words or phrases. In short, it is an easy thing to keep a diary.

Then why doesn't everyone of us keep one?

If I were a millionaire

Let me imagine that I win the cash sweep this time. Then I become a millionaire.

How shall I make use of my property? I think the best way is to invest half of my wealth in business and a quarter of it for the establishment of a school. I will also contribute ten thousand dollars to welfare organizations for the poor. The business I wish to take up is to open a tailor shop and an industrial and chemical works too in order to give some work to those who are unemployed. I plan to run a large free school, which will be well decorated, and the classrooms well ventilated and comfortable for the students to study.

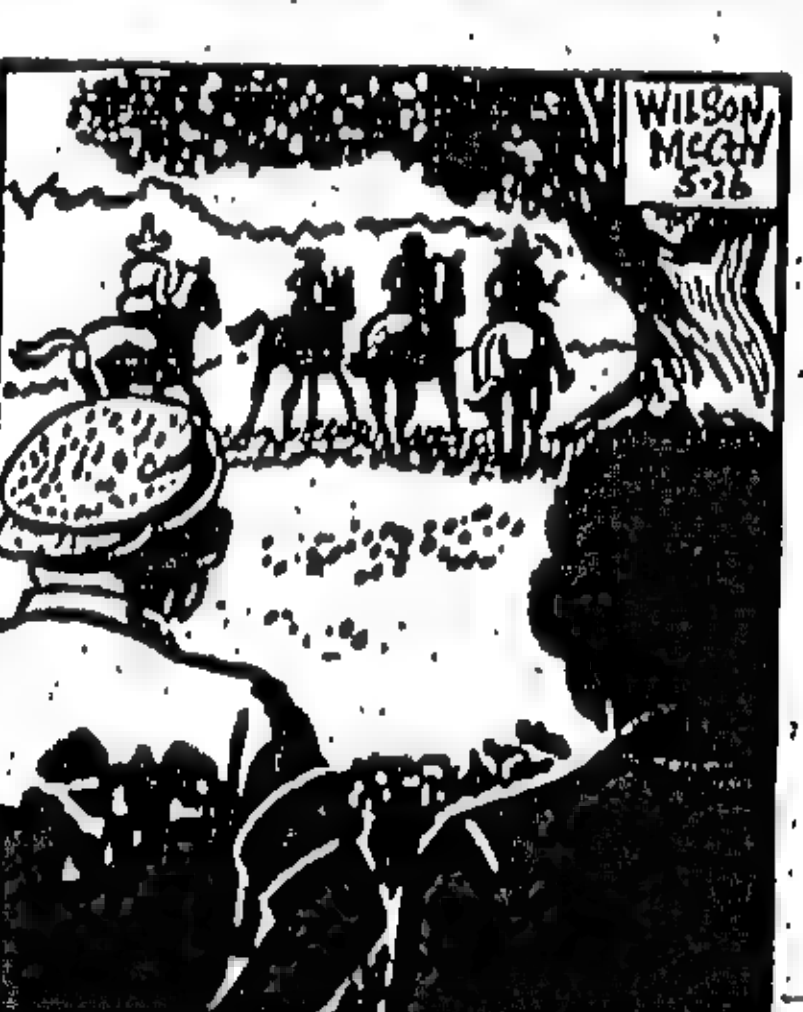

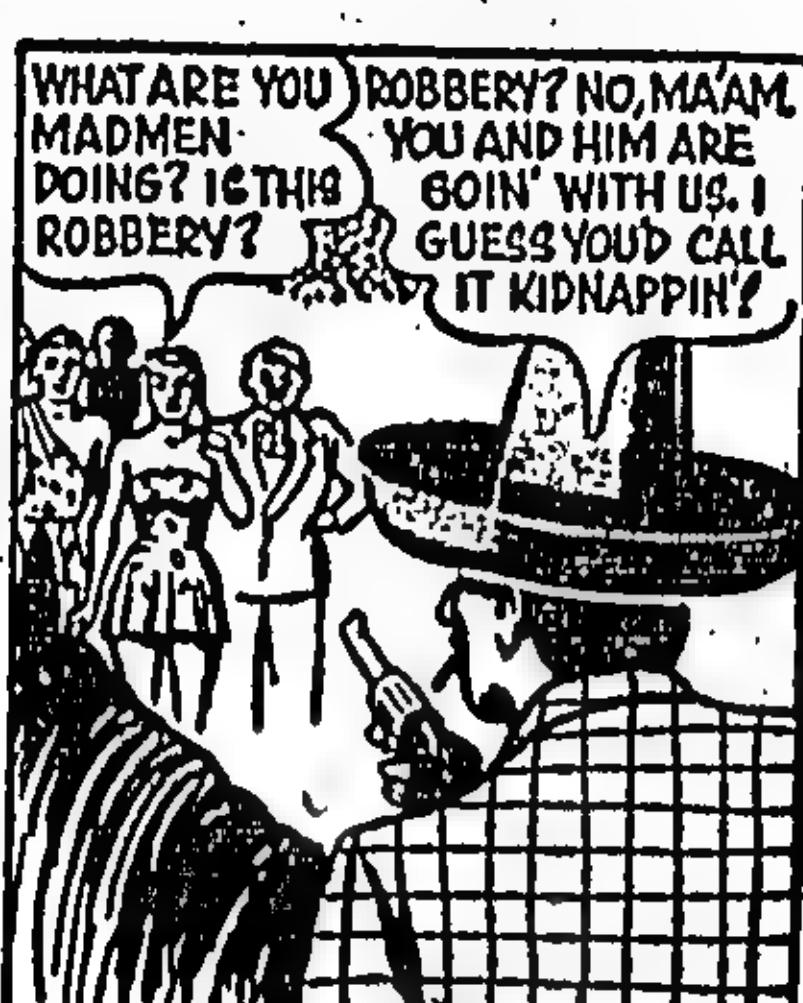

The school can accommodate a little more than one thousand pupils. Poor children who cannot afford to go to school will all be admitted. Meanwhile I must not overlook the old and poor for they are unable to work. I shall also donate money for their cause. So I hope that my imagination will come true, and wish everyone who can afford to do so spare a little money towards charity.

Queen's Road Central at tiffin time

Queen's Road Central, regarded as the most flourishing part in Hong Kong, is very busy all day long, especially at tiffin time.

While the clock strikes one, all workers of different factories and emporiums as well as officials from many Government Departments come out of their offices in a great hurry to take their tiffin. Boys and girls, after being kept in schools for a long time, with bags in their hands and satchels on their backs, flock out from schools with empty stomachs, hurrying home for tiffin. The road is now thronged with people of different kinds. Some students and officials go home hurriedly for tiffin along Queen's Road Central, while others enter the cafes and restaurants nearby in search of vacant seats. Under such circumstances, all the cafes and restaurants are crowded and clamorous like markets. And so at the same moment, the stations are full of people waiting in long streams for buses. Numerous vehicles trot to and fro on the road. All these conditions happen at tiffin time.

I wonder why

I wonder why the rain comes down,
Instead of pouring up;
And why a dog, before its' big,
First has to be a pup?

I wonder why a cluck lays eggs,
Then sits on them for weeks,
Instead of laying them on leaves,
Like moths down by the creeks?

Do thirsty folk mean what they say—
That they are feeling dry?
I wish I were wiser and knew

AROUND BALL

Ten or more players.

Equipment: Two basketballs, or two dumb-bells, or two bats.

The children form in two equal circles, each circle having a basket ball or a dumb-bell or a bat. Each circle has a captain.

At a signal, each captain passes the ball quickly to the person on his right and so on until it comes back to the captain, who calls out "One!" and without stopping passes the ball on again.

This is repeated until the captain calls out "Five!" at which he raises the ball high over his head as a signal that his team is through passing. The side that finishes first wins.

A good game to encourage teamwork.

Lost in the forest

One day my friends and I had a picnic at a certain village. When we arrived there, we found out that there was a large tropical forest on the west of the village. After a short time we went towards our destination.

In the forest, trees were high and tall, and birds built their nests among the trees which were coated by moss. Butterflies flew to and fro and birds sang their songs to praise nature. Trees were adorned by buds and green leaves in honour of the warm, beautiful sunshine. Some logs were on the ground. Here and there were bushes, grass and small plants. Sunlight was on the tops of the trees which seemed to have a golden crown.

My friends suggested playing a game named, "Hide and Find." Some of us hid among rocks while others hid behind trees. I went into the forest and hid behind a large tall tree. After a moment I found that I had lost my way. Rushing here and there, I tried my very best to find the way but at last I gave up such an attempt. Suddenly I hit upon a plan. I climbed up a tall tree, and looked in every direction. I saw nothing but trees. The sun was setting. The beams made the eastern sky change its colour. Night came gradually and darkness came upon the earth. All at once I saw something moving at a far distance, so I climbed up a tree. Bad fortune came on me. A snake dashed against me so I descended from the tall tree as quickly as possible. Hunger and thirst forced me to walk on in terror in order to find some wild fruits or birds' eggs. It was so dark that it was difficult for me to walk steadily. Falling on the ground, I stood up again and continued my hopeless search. Suddenly my feet felt cold and I found that there was the source of a river. A river must have an outlet. Water flowed over some dead logs which had fallen in the water in a murmuring sound. Then I knew that the river was the path by which I might escape from this wet, tropical and dangerous forest. As I walked a step forward, something caught my feet and I examined it. It was a rope which connected a boat to the bank of the river. I went into the boat and found some dried bread and the dead body of a man. I slept in the boat. Early the next morning I woke up and buried the dead man under some rocks and earth. Rowing the boat with great strength, after three hours I was in the sea. How happy I was at that time.

AT MY TYPEWRITER...

WORD-MAKING

"Rome was not built in a day." This proverb is for the impatient and discouraged.

Anyone, who attempts a task of any magnitude, may be beset by two temptations, namely, impatience and discouragement. He starts with hope and enthusiasm; but finding that the task he has set himself will take much longer than he thought, becomes impatient and scamps the work to get it finished. Or, when he realises the difficulties to be overcome, he becomes discouraged, relaxes his efforts, or abandons the work as hopeless.

Remember that no task that is really worth doing can be done either quickly or easily. Slow progress must not make us impatient, and difficulties must not discourage us. So, as a check to impatience, and a word of cheer to discouragement, comes the old proverb - "Rome was not built in a day."

But this proverb, meant to encourage, must not be used, as it sometimes is, as an excuse for laziness. The idler when remonstrated with on his lack of progress, may gaily reply, "Ah well! What can you expect? Rome was not built in a day." I certainly hope you children won't look at this in this way.

Happy days to you all, from

Auntie Vee

HAPPINESS

A puppy said to a big dog,
"The best thing for a dog is happiness, and happiness is in my tail. That is why I am chasing it."

The old dog replied, "I too, find that happiness is a fine thing for a dog and it is in my tail.
But I have noticed that when I chase it, it keeps running away from me; but when I go about my business, it comes after me.

Like the puppy, we should learn from those older than ourselves, that happiness is not found by going after it. Happiness will come to us when we try our best to be good, and do good, daily.

Bitterness and happiness

We often see groups of ants carrying small bits of food to their hole, they work so hard in order that they have food to eat when winter comes. As you know it is very cold in winter, so the small animal can not go out to get food. So they must work very hard before winter comes, then they can enjoy a cheerful vacation. From such a point of view we noticed that happiness comes after bitterness.

If we want to have a happy future, we ought to work hard now, otherwise we will be sorry when the time has gone. Young boys and girls, do remember:
bitterness is the foundation of happiness.

Peter Quennell's Bookshelf

It has taken Ernest Hemingway a whole decade to give birth to his fifth novel.

And now that the novel has at length appeared every admirer of Hemingway at his best—"Fiesta," the volumes of short stories, large tracts of "A Farewell to Arms," and the more graphic and less sentimental passages of "For Whom the Bell Tolls"—must regret that the dilatory parent did not dally 10 years longer.

For Across the River and Into the Trees is a really very, very bad book—so bad that it reads now and then like a cruel piece of self-parody.

His weakness

If the novelist had meant (as presumably he did not mean) to point out the somewhat shaky foundations on which his talent rested we should be obliged to admit that he had done an exceedingly clever job.

Over-simplification has always been his weakness. As ashamed of his own intellectual gifts and interests as a new boy at school caught reading poetry after lights-out, he had always exalted beef at the expense of brains, and has seemed to suggest that bull-fighters, boxers, jockeys, ex-soldiers, two-fisted tramps, and international burmen were, when you came down to it, the only right and good guys.

For the Golden Calf of worldlier writers he has substituted the Dumb Ox. And his latest hero, Richard Cantwell—colonel, formerly general, of U.S. Infantry is the dumbest ox that ever swatted a fly with the truculent expression of a giant-killer.

Yet the basic idea of the narrative has much to recommend it.

This is a story of first and last love—the passion of a man who knows that his life is ending, and of a young Italian girl, a beautiful Venetian countess, for whom love and life are just beginning.

The background of the tale is Venice and the marshy country behind the city, where Cantwell plans to enjoy a final glorious duck-shoot.

Such is the material. But what of the treatment?

The love-story, which might be pathetic and moving, never manages to escape from a mass of clogged verbiage, since it is unsupported by any genuine observation of the lovers' characters.

We have no definite clue as to how their love developed, or as to the nature of the attraction that threw the countess into her colonel's arms. And the single clue that we receive is very far from satisfying:

ROBOTS ON THE MARCH

Robots are on the march again. This time the mechanical man is a Swede and the strong point in his personality is his brain.

Patented under the trade name BARK and invented by the same company which made the modern telephone system possible, the robot "brain" has been officially declared alive, by Crown Prince Gustaf Adolf.

At its "coming alive" party in Stockholm the robot excelled itself by completing in a few minutes mathematical problems which would have taken a professor hours to solve. Since then the robot has gone from strength to strength or from problem to problem and when Lund University provided it with a question on atomic research, the answer was ready in 40 hours.

Experts agreed that the most modern manual calculating machine would have taken nearly 2,000 hours to tackle the same problem.

Now the robot is to be honoured by being promoted from the showrooms to the research departments of Sweden's fighting Services. Occasionally it will be loaned to the Universities and Technical Schools—but only when the problems of this modern age prove too much for the professors.

"He did not know, among other things, that the girl loved other things, that the girl loved him because he had never been sad one waking morning of his life. . . . He had experienced anguish and sorrow. But he had never been sad in the morning."

In poor shape

If a grand passion can originate as simply as that, all that one needs to be truly and passionately loved is an ironclad digestion!

Colonel Cantwell's digestion is good. But his heart, alas! is in poor shape.

Among innumerable dry martinis he is perpetually swallowing pills to ward off a fatal heartattack; and in intervals of making love (which he does through prose after page of brief and broken sentences sometimes tough, sometimes mawkish, and sometimes both together) he broods over the list of his losses—"three battalions in my life and three women"—and gets ready for his approaching end.

He also gossips to barmen and head-waiters (with whom he has concocted a series of extremely embarrassing private jokes) and indulges in cantankerous reminiscence about his military exploits.

Winsome dummy

Is he presented as a tragic figure of fun? No, Hemingway is evidently trying to endow him with a fine heroic colouring.

He has "wild bear blood," we are solemnly informed, and downs his martinis with a "wild bear truculence": "old steel eyes," and "old smile," a "broken nose like a gladiator's in the oldest statues," besides a fund of soldierly obscenities that has frightened the English publisher into frequent asterisks.

COMMUNIST INFILTRATION

How far can Communism infiltrate into everyday life? The answer, apparently, is a very long way.

As proof of this, correspondent David Lee reports from Trieste that at a secret session of the Trieste Communist Party recently one of the items on the agenda was—smoking.

For five years the local Red leaders and their followers have smoked Yugoslav cigarettes—smuggled across the frontier and sold at 1s 6d for 20. Now it has been revealed that the sale of the cigarettes has been giving strong financial support to the various strong pro-Tito organisations within the City. As a result the Communists were faced with the problem of whether or not to order their members to stop smoking "Tito-flake."

If they gave the order, then what cigarettes could they substitute? Italian cigarettes were inferior—American "Capitalistic" cigarettes too expensive.

In despair the Party members looked up at a bust of Stalin on the wall of the Conference room. A few seconds later they had decided—to ban the "Tito-flake". To avoid being tempted by other brands the more ardent Party members will no doubt give up smoking altogether!

"NO ADMITTANCE"

Evidence that not every country is prepared to offer post-war hospitality and a helping hand to war-time enemies, comes in a letter from Cecil Clark in Mexico.

Recently, when thousands of German, Japanese and other refugees clamoured to be allowed to enter Mexico and start a new life there, the Mexican authorities ordered "No Admittance" signs to be posted along the frontiers.

Immediately, a high official of the International Refugee Organisation visited Mexico City to ask for an explanation. Previously, the official had hoped to negotiate the entry of several thousand displaced people. Argentina had agreed to take a share of the war victims—so had Venezuela and several other Latin American countries. Why not Mexico?

The answer, according to the Mexican newspaper "El Universal" was simply that Mexico has laid down a policy stating that the refugees would not be welcome—and intended to stick to that policy.

Later the official was told that the policy might only be a temporary one. Our correspondent, on the other hand, noticing the continued imposition of rigid immigration quotas, believes that the refugees would be well advised to forget all about Mexico as a possible home.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1950.

Since man first walked erect, and was able to cast his eyes heavenward to notice the Cosmic Artist display his artistry upon a backcloth of blue, the sight of living things winging their way across the uncharted leagues towards the unknown, has stirred man's soul and the music of the Hounds of Heaven has quickened his blood.

From the time the first weapon was made there have been hunters to pit their cunning against that of these glorious creatures and the birds have held their own until recently, when automatic weapons used indiscriminately against them have decimated their numbers. Even now there are vast companies that keep trust with the midnight sun their clamour filling lands far removed from the taint of man.

Of these companies I will try to describe a few species that may be met with in this Colony.

Although there is a popular division of wildfowl into Swans, Geese and Ducks, this cannot be maintained scientifically as they all belong to one family Anatidae, however this distinction is valid for field purposes in Europe and generally speaking for this area.

Similar flight

Swans are familiar to most of us, they are distinguished from others of their family by their large size, pure white plumage and long slender necks. The flight of all swans is similar, the neck is fully outstretched and slow, regular, and powerful wing beats produce a musical humming thrub, very distinctive and audible over long distances.

Such heavy birds rise with considerable effort, a long flapping glide over the water is necessary before they become airborne. Flocks on the wing fly in oblique lines usually silent, with the exception of the Whooper and rare rumpeter swans.

There are two of these species that might well occur within our limits. Jankowskis Swan breeding in the far North, has pure white plumage and bill black with the basal part yellow, its note is a clear flute like whistle, and the Whooper Swan again breeding in the far North, this species is very similar to the last but is a larger bird with more yellow on the bill.

HK Nature notes

LOCAL SWANS & GEESE

The Whooper's flight, mode of feeding and general characteristics are much the same as those of the Mute swan, but flight differences are diagnostic. This bird lacks the wing music of the Mute, being merely a swishing sound common to many large birds. The Whooper's voice from which it derives its name is a loud bugle-like double note Whoop-as the second syllable pitched higher than the first, this call heard from long lines of birds high against a cloud-filled sky is never to be forgotten.

Smaller but not less stirring are Grey Geese. These are at once recognised as such by their resemblance to the domesticated barnyard bird, several species are much alike and cannot always be distinguished when seen flying high. At reasonable range typical adults are distinguished by well defined characteristics.

Largest species

The Grey Lag is the largest species and has a large, stout bill and heavy head noticeable in the air as well as on the ground. The forewing and rump are pale grey, the bill is bright orange and legs flesh coloured. Typical flight is direct with regular wing beats and is faster than it appears. Flocks moving some distance on migration fly in "V" formation, apex forward or in long trailing lines with each bird maintaining a regular distance from its neighbour, and according to experienced wildfowlers, an old bird always acting as leader.

Flocks of this and other species of grey geese sometimes perform striking evolutions in an organised and perfectly co-ordinated manner. All grey geese are birds of open country and are purely terrestrial never even on low objects and outside of breeding season are thoroughly gregarious. Being purely terrestrial they are land feeders grazing on grasslands and marshes, but occasionally birds will feed in shallow water, dipping heads and up ending like ducks. Normally they are diurnal feeders but where the feeding grounds are much disturbed or where they are persecuted they will feed at night.

In hot climates as in India, flocks will flight to water and rest during the heat of the day on sand banks and rivers, or bunds dividing flooded fields.

On the vast flooded areas around the upper reaches of the Indus I have seen enormous numbers of wild fowl congregating far out on the waters and the roar of wings as pack after pack of birds rose was awe inspiring. There was the sportsman's paradise: Grey geese, Flamingoes, Buddy, Shelduck, Teal, Widgeon, Shoveller, and Mallard were present there.

Legendary shyness

The shyness of feeding geese is legendary. Who has not heard of a wild goose chase? I have been on more than I care to admit. Only during unusual weather conditions do these grand fowl lose some of their wariness, gales will send them low over the sea wall, or blizzards will enable a hunter to get within easy gunshot.

I recall stalking a pack of 20 or so grey lags during the hard winter of 1938. I had seen them go down into a salt-water creek, and between the surries of snow driven with the full force of a Sou'westerly gale, I crawled through deep drift and across frozen mud, coming upon the creek almost before I had realised it and there not five yards away stood a rather disconsolate band of geese.

This was the closest and most exciting glimpse of geese I had ever had. How long they would have remained there is problematical, but with my arms, hands and face becoming completely numb, I had to stand up to restore some circulation, the geese sprang into the air with frightened yelps and were tossed into the swirling whiteness with desolate cries.

All geese nest in the North, and will only be seen here on spring and autumn migration and during the winter months; an occasional winter visitor is the White-fronted Goose, a darker bird than the Grey lag, it is recognised by a prominent white patch around the base of the bill and the extensive black barring on the breast, this goose is very active in flight and possesses an astonishing power of "reversing engines", a party within 50 feet of a wild fowler's head as he lies prone, will shoot up perpendicularly out of range before he can put his gun up. This goose is common along the Fukien and Kwangtung coasts from late October until April.

The Lesser White-fronted Goose, has a similar range but is much rarer. Darkest of the grey geese is the Eastern Bean Goose, with its orange or orange yellow legs and bill black, yellow towards the tip. This goose is very common in Kwangtung in winter feeding in paddy and bean fields, and having a marked liking for small sweet potatoes.

Small Black Brant

The last and most easily identified goose is the Black Brant or Brant Goose, the smallest and darkest of all geese. The whole head, neck and upper breast are black, with a small whitish patch on the sides of the neck, in contrast upper tail coverts and region around the vent are pure white.

These geese are more maritime than other species, great flocks feeding on Zostera beds uncovered by the tides. Flight is swift and compact, fly in irregular packs or in lines strung out at right angles to the course, which writhe and undulate in a graceful manner, this feature making them recognisable at great distances.

A goose that should perhaps be mentioned although not common in South China is the Swan-Goose. As its name suggests it is a Swan-like goose more than 30 inches long, the neck is noticeably longer and more slender than that of the normal goose, its forehead is narrowly marked with white, and the upper forehead, crown and a line down the ridge of the neck are of an unpalatable brown.

This handsome bird occasionally wanders South with other skeins of geese and should be looked for during the winter months in our area. It is more than likely that this bird is the progenitor of the modern domestic geese of China.

ANTI-RED HARA-KIRI

What makes an anti-Communist a danger to the community? The answer, if the story of Sedchiro Hisawa, the patriotic Japanese, is anything to go by, is a passion for dynamite.

When Sedchiro was repatriated from Red China, he decided to blow up Japan's two leading Communists.

He collected a dozen sticks of dynamite and strung them round his body beneath his flowing cape, intending to seek out his enemies and blow them—and himself—to smithereens. To friends who objected Sedchiro replied that an extra life was little tough to give in the cause of freedom. His only problem was to find his victims. When he failed to do so he went to a Buddhist priest for help and advice. Meanwhile, the police heard the venture, contacted Sedchiro and took his dynamite away.

Now, writes Richard Hughes, they wonder what charge they can lay on the would-be assassin. At the time they secretly admit that it would have been a good thing for Japan if Sedchiro had succeeded in his plot.

Danish Consul

Warlike service in the Hong Kong Volunteers and International at Shamshui, had made Mr. Erik Huttmeier feel almost like a native of the Colony.

He is the Far Eastern manager of the Northern Feather Works Limited, giant world-wide Danish concern devoted to the processing of feathers and down for subsequent sale to the furniture and blanket industries.

As head of this concern he is also honorary consul for Denmark in Hong Kong. A long tradition, established before his time, has associated the manager of the Northern Feather Works Limited with the local Danish consularship.

A warm personality enables him to combine the dual nature of his duties with a minimum of friction. The task is not easy, because it requires him to administer many consular chores at a time when a nervous world is paying special regard to the trends of a sensitive market.

The Danish community in Hong Kong is not large, and Danish business concerns are few. But Danish shipping is a feature of harbour activities, and Mr. Huttmeier's consular time is mostly taken up with supervision of the entry and departure of Danish vessels. One of the country's great enterprises, the East Asiatic Steamship Company, has a branch in Hong Kong which does a flourishing business.

Every year on the birthday of King Frederik IX, Mr. Huttmeier gives a reception at his home where the 100-odd members of the Danish community meet to drink a loyal toast. Danish seamen then in Hong Kong are also invited, and are usually surprised to meet on the other side of the globe these Danes working and living so many thousands of miles away from home.

Their wayfarer hearts appreciate this spirit of adventure which is so symbolic of the Scandinavian race.

Calling at the Pedder Street office of Mr. Huttmeier the other day, I encountered a comparatively young man. Mr. Huttmeier is only 39 years of age, and looks younger. He is so tall that I felt dwarfed in his presence. It was with a distinct sense of relief that I sat down at his invitation.

As we talked about his career I transpired that Mr. Huttmeier is one of the few people who join an organisation after leaving school and remain with it for the rest of their lives. There exists in his whole attitude a sense of permanence and stability which people do not exude who move from one calling to another and spend years discovering the right one.

He was born in Copenhagen and went to school there. When he was about 14 or 15 he had an idea that he wanted to become an engineer, but changed his mind and did not go to the university to complete his education.

At 17 he joined the Northern Feather Company Limited as an apprentice. His parents were happy because they knew that it would be possible for him to make a career out of this job. The firm was the biggest combine in the world devoted to the processing of feathers. It bought feathers and down in great quantities, and conditioned them to the degree of softness required in quilts and luxurious couches and armchairs.

Three years of apprenticeship ended with his transfer to the firm's branch in Amsterdam. It was the first time he had been abroad, and the experience aroused in him a keenness to see what the rest of the world had to offer. In 1931 the chance came when he was moved to Canton to join the branch there.

He arrived in China on January 11, 1932, and has remained in this country ever since, with the exception of brief holidays spent at home. He was assistant to the manager in Canton, and when the latter was on leave, he took on the task of acting Danish consul there, learning how to conduct the consularship by degrees. Danish commercial activities in China were never of a degree to justify the maintenance of an official Consulate.

In 1936 Mr. Huttmeier went to Shanghai as manager and remained there one year. When the time came for him to take his leave, he decided to utilise the trans-Siberian railway for the trip. Recalling this, he told me it was one of the most profound experiences of his life.

The endless expanse of fir and pine was a revelation; the train travelled for days with never a change of scenery but great virgin forests. Siberia was so vast that a suggestion of limitless space was never absent. The panorama was constantly one of size. Every glance out of the window provided a spectacle; he felt like a tiny molecule traversing the edge of the world.

Mr. Huttmeier paid occasional visits to Hong Kong before 1939, but in that year he came down to the Colony as manager. Also in that year he was married at the Peak Church to a Danish girl whom he met at home on his last leave. They both liked Hong Kong, and determined to settle down to the leisurely life led by the European business community.

When war with Japan threatened, Mr. Huttmeier joined the Hong Kong Volunteer Defence Corps, and the Japanese retaliated by internment him at Shamshui after the surrender. They would not have done this if he had not taken up arms against them, since Denmark was not at war with Japan. Anxious as they were to exhibit friendship towards "third nationals", they sent Mrs. Huttmeier to Shanghai where she remained free.

They met again in London in 1945. When they were separated, their son was only a few months old. Seeing the boy in England at the age of five was a poignant moment in Mr. Huttmeier's life. The family, joyous in reunion, flew home to Denmark in time for Christmas.

PEOPLE IN THE NEWS

By The SCRIBE

The next year he elected to return to Hong Kong. The place by now was home to him and he had fought to preserve its integrity. When the graceful slopes of the Peak loomed into view as the ship carrying them back, he glimpsed the wide harbour, the Huttmeiers felt a wave of emotion stirring within them.

Three years ago he was appointed general manager in the Far East for his company, and as retirement is still a long way off, he envisages a prolonged stay in the Colony. It is not likely that he will retire here, since the ultimate claim of Denmark is insistent and unchallenged. But he plans to live in Hong Kong for as long as he is able to.

Mr. Huttmeier's career has not been crisscrossed with events which linger in the memory, since he has travelled on one steady track all his life. But every body has dates which they remember, dates which underline significant personal achievements. As we talked the Consul continually recalled dates which matter to him—pinning down with no hesitation the exact year and the month. It was a feat of memory which impressed me, as my call was not expected, and he had no notes.

When I queried him about this he said he has been methodical all his life. System is the thing, without which chaos is inevitable.

Mr. Huttmeier is unmistakably Scandinavian. A trace of the Nordic accent is evident in his speech. He is well-built, and surveys the world from the detached point of view endowed by exceptional height.

Korean implications

The emergence of the United Nations as a fact and not a fable is the impression brought to Hong Kong by Miss Hazel Jackson, Australian war correspondent, who has just made a tour of Korea.

Miss Jackson went to Korea a few weeks ago as a representative of the new Australian magazine, "Woman's Day and Home", to cover the war there. Accompanied by a photographer, she visited Pusan, Seoul, Taegu and the frontlines, and is now convinced she has seen the birth of a militant United Nations which will provide the best hope of peace.

She received me at her hotel the other day, and mixed gracious hospitality with a stirring account of the way things are going in Korea. When I left the room, I was ready to accept her contention that we are probably nearer an era of peace than we have ever been these last five years.

Miss Jackson told me that if I felt the Allied effort in Korea was purely an American show I had better correct this impression right away. It was a UN undertaking from top to bottom, and the way it was progressing left no doubt in her mind that a UN undertaking it would remain until the Korean problem was resolved.

In addition to Americans, there are in Korea today fighting men from Britain, Australia, Canada, the Philippines, Turkey, South Africa, Greece and a few Latin American countries. Field hospitals are being supplied by several Scandinavian countries, and the Dutch Navy is taking an active part in the coastal campaign.

All these elements are learning how to combine into a single whole, and the emergence of the ensemble as a United Nations force is one of the most encouraging contributions of the Korean war to peace, Miss Jackson said. There is no misnomer in the seeming incongruity, because all the worth-while things of this world are achieved through pain. Until Korea there was no United Nations; people sneered at allusions to the physical strength of the UN. They will not do that again.

While she admits that the Americans are playing a leading role in the Korean war, she told me the Americans themselves are anxious to emphasise the United Nations character of their campaign.

Miss Hazel Jackson

UN supplies probably originate in the United States, but once they get to Korea the United Nations Command takes over, and distribution is effected without discrimination.

There is no such thing as rationing for Americans as opposed to rationing for the British. It is shared and shared alike—whether it be hospital accommodation, transport facilities or chewing gum.

I wanted to know the extent of the damage effected by Allied bombers, and Miss Jackson said the destruction was ghastly. Everywhere gaping ruins proclaimed the inhumanity of the war machine. In Seoul there was not a single undamaged window pane to keep out the cold Manchurian winds which greeted the liberators after they entered.

She spent a short time there, but from what she was able to see it seemed as if the North Koreans—disarmed by the hopeless nature of their struggle against overwhelming odds—destroyed everything they could before pulling out. They might have wanted the ruins of Seoul to symbolise, in a ghastly fashion, their own impending ruin.

I asked her for the reaction of the Korean people to the war, and how the man in the street felt over the presence of foreign soldiers in his country. Miss Jackson said to her knowledge no Korean regards the defeat of the invaders in terms of an Asiatic defeat. Perhaps in the months to come administrative blunders might provide grounds for complaints about "United Nations imperialism," but for the moment all U.N. troops are regarded as genuine liberators.

Miss Jackson said in Seoul there were many stirring scenes of welcome, and it amazed her to reflect how many loyal South Koreans there were who braved death at the hands of the North-ernners rather than surrender the flag which they unfurled in thousands the day liberation dawned.

housewife hanging out her laundry, she rushed past him into the house and emerged with a flag, without which she said she would not be photographed. Little things like happily weeping old men and small boys trailing after GI's in the hope of obtaining some candy convey in measureless terms the return of freedom. But over everything looms the gruesome pallor of destruction. Miss Jackson said it will take years, perhaps decades, to restore the old symmetry to things. Right now morality has gone; standards are submerged, and stark poverty with all its ungracious attributes is the universal lot.

The United Nations, however, is not unmindful of the social problem. Huge quantities of rice appear with the troops, and are distributed at once. Blankets, medicine and clothing are pulled from all over the world and given to those in need. The Korean peasant first, and then the city dweller, dazed by the calamity which has befallen him, weeps over these gestures which say with a quiet dignity that humanity is still a part of the Western approach to war.

Miss Jackson is actually the Fashion Editor for her magazine. She was selected, however, for the Korean assignment because she had once been a war correspondent in Germany, and because she knows the background to the Korean trouble.

Her father, Mr. Samuel Jackson, was the Australian representative on the first United Nations Korean Commission, and she spent some time with him when he was in Japan.

She is so young and demure that her environment would seem to be a setting of lace and lavender. But the maturity of her undertakings prove that she carries a steady head on her shoulders.

Head of MGM

Mr. Chan Keong fits into his role as the head of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in Hong Kong from a long association with the world of films. He began life by liking movies, and was persistent enough to see that this affection provided him with a living as well. I met Mr. Chan at his office the other day, and he proudly showed me the premises he had just acquired at Edinburgh House. Everything was new—offices, desks, typewriters. For him to visit theatres, because it is partly his business, and because long ago he decided that as an educator the cinema is unexcelled.

I gathered from Mr. Chan that he is carried away by films, the emotional impact of events on the screen merge after a fashion into the sum-total of his experiences.

Discussing his business, the cinema has become world's most popular form of entertainment. Large in sense of the term, it is still available for all to enjoy.

At the beginning of this month a Yugoslav Army patrol exchanged fire with Albanian guards at Padoy on the Albanian-Yugoslav frontier. This was taken as a typical sign of mounting tension on the frontier and the Yugoslav Air Force was instructed to fly more regular patrols along the border.

Now it is known that a party of Soviet "experts" have arrived in Albania to supervise a new "purge" within the Albanian Communist Party. The purge is intended to strengthen Albania's resistance to recent Yugoslav propaganda stunts aimed at working up discontent among Albanian peasants and undermining the present Albanian regime.

Yugoslavia has also been "infiltrating" secret agents into Albania and six of these were recently arrested and tried by an Albanian "People's Court."

The present mounting tension on the border is the result of new Albanian attempts to prevent any further such infiltration. The Al-himself he has appointed a sub-commission with Venetian blinds and an air-conditioner.

Mr. Chan holds a well-paid job as the distributor of MGM films in Hong Kong, and it is his business to see that good returns are provided for the films that are sent here. He must know enough of local taste to detect what vehicles are likely to make money. A succession of poor box-office draws is a thing he dreads.

Mr. Chan is not a native of Hong Kong. He was born in Malaya, and has never lived in China except for brief periods of holiday. He is an ex-patriate whose roots are buried in the British Commonwealth. His loyalty is divided between C.M.S. and the Commonwealth.

As a boy he studied in Malayan Federation and Singapore, and soon after leaving school he worked for the S. Brothers Organisation, which controls more than 50 theatres in the Federated States and the causeway. With this firm he developed a taste in films, and he jumped at the chance to come to Hong Kong to head MGM. The offer was made to him in 1946.

He is a big, athletically-built man. At heart, however, he remains a teen-age movie fan, because he tells me he goes to nearly every picture, whether good or bad.

It is not a boring experience for him to visit theatres, because it is partly his business, and because long ago he decided that as an educator the cinema is unexcelled.

COLD WAR IS WARMING UP

There are signs, in a report from correspondent Fred Manoir in Trieste, that Tito's cold war against the Kremlin to warming up again.

At the beginning of this month a Yugoslav Army patrol exchanged fire with Albanian guards at Padoy on the Albanian-Yugoslav frontier. This was taken as a typical sign of mounting tension on the frontier and the Yugoslav Air Force was instructed to fly more regular patrols along the border.

Now it is known that a party of Soviet "experts" have arrived in Albania to supervise a new "purge" within the Albanian Communist Party. Yugoslavia has also been "infiltrating" secret agents into Albania and six of these were recently arrested and tried by an Albanian "People's Court."

The present mounting tension on the border is the result of new Albanian attempts to prevent any further such infiltration. The Al-banians have imposed a curfew on villages all along their side of the border and the villagers—and their homes—are checked by police day and night.

Whether this is to prevent Yugoslav agents reaching Albania or whether it is to stop Albanians escaping into Yugoslavia is difficult to tell. Either theory is probable when two countries quarrel behind the Iron Curtain.

HINT OF CONFERENCE OF THE BIG POWERS

Lake Success, October 20.

America has no objection to a meeting of the Big Powers to discuss problems threatening world peace, the United States representative, Mr. John Foster Dulles, told the United Nations Political Committee today.

At the same time the British Minister of State, Mr. Kenneth Younger, said that Britain has always been prepared to engage in conversations of the type envisaged.

But he expressed "a certain caution which makes me want to get some assurances before I do anything to raise hopes which might subsequently be let down."

Mr. Dulles told the Committee the door is open to Big Power consultations, but added, "I cannot say that I entertain great hopes in these consultations, but I can never tell."

Mr. Dulles was speaking on a resolution put forward by Iraq and Syria calling for a recommendation to the Big Four—the United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union—that they meet during the present Assembly session and discuss the outstanding problems threatening world peace.

"We see no objection to that," said Mr. Dulles. "We are ready to do it. The door is open. My Government is quite prepared to join in a recommendation that there be consultations."

"Some of these consultations have already taken place which you know of, and we are always glad to have consultations of that sort."

Basic attitude
Mr. Dulles said that the United States Government is certainly disposed to do everything it can to relieve the tensions and fears in the world.

He had spoken in "an informal, conversational way, entirely from my heart—to try to give the impression of the basic attitude which I think my Government takes towards this whole problem."

Mr. Dulles said that although many attempts at agreement among the Great Powers had failed in the past that was no reason why there should be despair.

The United States entirely accepted the principle that wherever there seems to be a reasonable opportunity of making world tensions in a way compatible with decency and justice we are "prepared to accept all those opportunities and to explore them to the utmost."

Emphasizing that any settlement must be a just one, Mr. Dulles said, "In the case of Austria let us say we can agree on an Austrian treaty."

"But I am sure that joy would not reign in Austria if all we did was to accept whatever terms were proposed by one of the Great Powers."

British view
Mr. Kenneth Younger (Britain) hoped to be able to support the Iraq-Syria resolution when it had been finally drafted to meet suggested amendments.

Mr. Younger commented that there seemed to be general agreement on the principles of the resolution. Britain was always prepared to engage in conversations of the type envisaged.

"What we are doing is to put the persuasive force of the General Assembly behind renewed attempts to make conversations of this type effective," he said.

Mr. Dulles had called attention to the difficulties of making a success of these attempts. "We must always bear in mind that the crisis which is envisaged in the resolution is not really due to lack of meetings," Mr. Younger said. "There have been plenty of meetings over the past five years."

Mr. Younger said that the British delegation had tried to get some indication from the Soviet delegation as to whether they were changing their point of view and "whether if we meet again in the fairly near future we could get any further than before."

"I have not seen very much indication," Mr. Younger added.

Some doubt
He joined with Mr. Dulles in doubting whether it would be of value—suggested by the resolution—that the Big Powers report back to the Assembly during the present session on any consultations they might have.

Mr. Younger said he would suggest that the resolution should ask that the Big Powers, insofar as they deemed it compatible with the success of their conversations, advise the General Assembly whenever there appeared to be a prospect of progress which might be of interest to the General Assembly or might contribute to world peace.

Mr. Younger said it might be thought that in the very short time available before the end of the session the Big Powers could tackle so very wide a subject as the outstanding problems which threaten world peace.

"These are tremendous subjects," he said, which could not be discussed without considerable preparation.

"Subject to that further observation I hope that my delegation will be able to vote for this resolution," said Mr. Younger.

Not substitute
Consultations of this kind affecting principally the Great Powers—though not excluding other nations—could never be a substitute for normal United Nations procedure, he added.

"During the past five years we have steadily got further and further away from the immediate post-war idea of Great Power consultation and have moved more and more towards broadening the powers of the General Assembly as a whole," Mr. Younger stated.

Mr. Younger said, "We ought not to think that they can be a substitute for the collective effort which we make here in the General Assembly of the United Nations."

Dr. Faal Jamali (Iraq), one of the sponsors of the resolution, said that it was proposed that the Big Powers should also discuss problems with other nations concerned.

"We firmly believe," he said, "that no decisions should be taken between the Great Powers about other States behind their backs."

Hamed Sultan (Egypt), supported the resolution though he said he would have preferred an earlier Iraq-Syria draft which had called for a report from the Big Powers by next month.

Dr. Sultan said that this had contained an appeal of a more urgent character. The people of the world were anxiously awaiting some views of lessening international tensions, he added.

General support
Dr. D. J. Van Balluseck (Netherlands) thought that there should be no objection to adopting the appeal.

Turkey, Brazil and El Salvador were among others to express support.

Mr. Arthur Lourie (Israel) said that Israel was in general support of the purposes of the resolution.

His delegation agreed with the view of the Iraqi representative that it was the United Nations method to discuss things in a conciliatory spirit—a principle which he hoped would be applied nearer home.

Dr. Alice Behler (Yugoslavia) was in favour of the spirit underlying the proposal.

He suggested that the People's Republic of China (Communist China) be designated as the Chinese Government to be represented at any such talks.

Various amendments and suggestions for change were put forward. It was eventually decided to adjourn and postpone a further meeting of the full Committee until tomorrow.

Acheson cautious
In Washington, the American Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Acheson, said that discussions between the Soviet Union and the Western Democracies were not likely to be productive until the two sides could talk from a basis of equal armed strength.

Mr. Acheson was asked at his weekly Press conference to comment on the possibility of another conference of British, American, French and Soviet leaders to settle international differences.

The reporter quoted statement by the British Foreign Secretary, Mr. Ernest Bevin, earlier this week.

Mr. Acheson declined to comment directly on Mr. Bevin's statement.

He understood that Mr. Dulles, in his statements, had been expressing the view which he (Mr. Acheson) had endorsed in a speech to the United Nations in September.

Mr. Acheson said he had pointed out that the United States was always ready to talk about any matter which people

ATOM EXPERT'S DISAPPEARANCE

Rome October 20.

Professor Bruno Pontecorvo, an Italian-born British naturalised atomic scientist who has been working at Harwell, the British atom research centre, has disappeared after coming to Italy for a holiday a fortnight ago, according to newspaper reports here tonight.

The Rome newspaper, "Momento Sera," tonight carried banner headlines declaring: "Italian atomic scientist flees to Russia."

No confirmation or denial was obtainable from the Italian police.

The British Embassy had no reports on where the professor was, the newspaper said. It was certain that Professor Pontecorvo was no longer in Italy nor were the members of his family, who were said to have joined him from Britain, it reported.

It can be said that the scientist flew away from an Italian town in a foreign aircraft furnished with false identity papers," the newspaper said. The paper added that the plan left in a North Easterly direction for a city beyond the Iron Curtain on the first stage of a journey to Russia.

The newspaper said that Professor Pontecorvo was a close professional associate of Dr. Klaus Fuchs, the Harwell scientist whose trial revealed the leak of atomic secrets to Russia.

The newspaper said that the professor's disappearance was discovered when he did not reply to letters from London. The report said that the British Intelligence Service sent agents to Italy to question the professor's relatives whom he had been visiting. There was no news of him.

"Able man"
The relatives, then notified the Italian police that the scientist was missing, according to the newspaper.

A colleague of Professor Pontecorvo said in London tonight that the professor "is not of the top people at Harwell."

The colleague added: "He is really a clever scientist, a most able man. I am most surprised at the report that he has disappeared. Do you think it is true?"

He added that Professor Pontecorvo had been at Harwell for about two years and was supposed to have become Professor in Nuclear Physics at Liverpool. He was between 40 and 45 years of age.

wanted to discuss with them—Russia or anyone else.

Mr. Bevin said in the House of Commons on Tuesday that the British Government would enter into any consultations with their friends on any proposals that might be considered if there was a real opportunity to solve some of the world problems.

(He also said the Government thought it important that any consultations between Big Powers should not be used as a substitute for the "united action for peace" plan agreed in the United Nations yesterday).—Reuter.

RUSSIAN INTEREST IN JAPAN

Lake Success, October 20.
Mr. John Foster Dulles of the United States said today that the Soviet Union had indicated its willingness to discuss informally with the United States the possibilities of a Japanese peace treaty.

"A time and place for discussion probably will be arranged within the next few days," Mr. Dulles was reported to have said in informal talks with all members of the Far Eastern Commission.

He is leaving for Washington on Monday for further discussions with the State Department.

Russia yesterday resumed her seat on the Far Eastern Commission after being absent since her walk-out on January 19.

Informed quarters in Washington believed this to be an indication of Russian interest in preliminary moves for a Japanese peace treaty which have been started by the United States with other Powers.

In Washington, diplomats speculated that Russia returned to her long vacant chair on the 13-nation Far Eastern Commission to snarl any move by the Commission toward negotiating a Japanese peace treaty.—Reuter and United Press

COMO EXPLOSION

Como, October 21.
Two Italian soldiers were killed and 10 wounded by the explosion of a mortar bomb in the Como area yesterday.

They were clearing unexploded ammunition after a fortnight's manoeuvres.—Reuter.

If the needs of a higher living standard are to be met, these are the problems to which the Consultative Committee has been addressing itself.

With more special reference to the second of them it wishes to constitute a Council for Technical Co-operation, which should have its headquarters at Colombo.

This should promote the movement of students from South and South East Asia to countries more advanced industrially and technically, where suitable instruction is available, and conversely the movement of teachers from the more advanced countries to schools and factories in South and South East Asia.

In this two-way traffic both ways are necessary and both are to be encouraged. But the cost will be considerable. If the scale of the movement is to be sufficient to yield the large and rapid results which seem so much needed.

The maximum cost allowed for this plan will be about eight million pounds for the first three years. Much the largest single contribution to this sum will be the United Kingdom, and she will presumably provide most of the training.

The money figure may seem small compared to our expenditures on defence and on our own social services. But of course the very magnitude of those arguments the difficulty of this and must still more embarrass us on the other side—the provision of capital.

There much will depend on the degree to which the Asiatic Governments maintain stable order and justify confidence.

The Commonwealth and Asia

The problem of trained manpower is almost more difficult. Modern industrial civilisation implies not merely a general level of basic literacy, but the existence above it of a varied multitude of trained skills and competences, ranging from the highest directing types, with their fringe of economists, statisticians, engineers and chemists, down through all grades of clerks, foremen, craftsmen, laboratory workers and the specialists in each special trade; and behind them, again, the highly trained professions—professors, teachers, doctors, sanitary experts, bankers, accountants, and so on.

The problem of Burma, or of Siam, is that of countries where human beings trained to fill most of these functions simply do not exist, or exist in totally inadequate numbers.

And even in countries like Ceylon, India, Pakistan or Malaya, the supply still needs to be largely and rapidly increased.

employee he or she leaves a story—a story that is valuable to your future welfare.

Different qualifications

Different positions within an organisation of course demand different qualifications. An executive needs abilities and qualities of character quite different from those demanded of a detail worker under him; an office worker and a salesman must be judged from entirely different points of view. But there are some characteristics which an employee in any capacity should

YOUR OWN HANDWRITING ANALYSED

Readers are invited to send in specimens of their own handwriting. The first two applications received each week will be analysed and the findings published in the following Sunday. There will be no charge for this service and no names will be published. Name and address must be supplied, but these will be kept strictly confidential. Should you wish to have a confidential general character analysis of yourself, send HK$5, together with a sample of your ordinary handwriting, preferably in ink, and a report will be returned to your personal address by return of post. Write to Mr. Joe Penn, c/o the "Sunday Herald," Windsor House, Hong Kong.

have, and of which the first and most essential one should be reliability.

Regardless of how highly qualified he may be for the job in question, no matter what other personal virtues he may have, if he is unreliable he will be no asset to his employer in the end. A rival applicant less talented but more dependable will be more valuable in the long run.

Employers should know for a certainty whether their trusted employees possess inherent qualities of honesty and initiative. Men considering partnership connections should first determine the mental and moral fibre of the individual, who will share the fortune of a business venture.

Innumerable instances involving loss, embarrassment, and litigation can be cited for illustration. But I shall not forget one which occurred in the early days of my practising grapho-analysis.

An established firm of brokers one day had their errand boy bring to my office half a dozen lines of writing with their manager's request for my grapho-analysis. I finished my analysis and sent it back to that firm right away. A single glance at the handwriting told me that the writer was a crook at heart; that he would steal, deceive, defraud, and in other ways betray confidences or responsibilities given to him.

It was easy to turn the scrap of paper over and write, "Do business with this man and inside six weeks he will steal your shirt."

A few minutes later my phone rang, and the manager told me with pointed humour that for once I had stumbled. The man who had written those few lines was an applicant for a sales job in his organisation; he created a favourable impression and had references from preachers, lawyers, and substantial business men. I was mistaken.

Salted gold mines

However, within six weeks the man who did the writing was put in jail for forgery, bad cheques, falsified orders. "He laughs best who laughs last" held good, and proves a point that every business man knows, i.e., that a reference is rarely given unless the person giving it is sure it will be good. "Salted gold mines" in the fields of character reference are all too common for the average employer to give much consideration to a letter of recommendation.

In this case the salesman used names of men who knew him casually—who were acquainted with his "good side," but not the "bad side" of his character. These men gave him a good word without knowing they were mistaken. Like the manager, they looked on the outside. In turn the manager innocently accepted the reference that was innocently made. So he lost thousands of dollars worth of stock on falsified jobs that were not ordered, but on which he paid commissions.

In the years since I have heard that manager tell the story over and over again, and despite his loss of $6,000, he became wiser and benefited by what Grapho-analysis had taught him. My remark based on that story of handwriting was not hit a miss. It was backed up by just such truth and undeniable evidence that this science of Grapho-analysis is here to stay and is coming into use by leaps and bounds every day.

To sum up the advantages of Grapho-analysis in testing or selecting prospective employees:

1. The test is carried out in an unbiased manner and without the applicant's knowledge.

2. The test obviates the necessity of personal interview, and whatever prejudice and biased views which may arise out of the employer's mind in the event of the interview will be eliminated.

3. The test may reveal special aptitudes in the applicant, and the employer may come across a "find" for some position other than the one immediately under consideration.

4. It saves uneconomic spending of time, money, and effort on training someone who turns out to have no aptitude for the job.

It is good to have someone who could read my future I believe in pre-destination It was all arranged.

The first and most prominent character trait of this writer is his remarkable frankness. It explains ease of verbal expression and the freestyle chats. He is exceedingly frank in speaking, and capable of finding words readily with which to express his thoughts. Instead of deceiving you he will tell you even the blunt truth if it seems best. No deception at all.

Next is the writer's keen, analytical, and inquiring mind. He is highly investigative, extremely anxious to learn things—with a keenly analytical mind reaching out to get knowledge, and to use it decisively.

This bit of writing reveals far more cool judgment than hot emotions of this writer's making decisions. He is not "hard boiled" but with judgment that will be influenced by his sympathies.

He is open-minded, positive about decisions, resentful against wounds to his dignity, has a very practical outlook upon life, and a sharp temper well under control. Is sensitive, but he does not nurse his hurts. Possesses a high standard of personal integrity.

There is real generosity, but there is also thriftiness. This means that he will spend easily when he spends—and is conservative when he is not spending. He is more likely to give to other people than to himself.

He is not too fond of rich food, or of deep colours, and he is indifferent to minor details.

This writer wants change and variety. It may be travel, or he may be satisfied in a profession or job where there is constant change. He loves the outdoors and likes to go places. And in all probability he will enjoy sports; he understands and appreciates music.

Is this the woman I should marry? Is this the man he seems to be? Handwriting answers these questions.

Here comes the handwriting of a lady that reveals an emotionally expressive nature; one of those expressive women who like to meet people, who express their pleasure by a happy ring to the voice, or sparkling eyes, and whose sympathies are shown in an open manner.

This writing also shows orderliness as well as a retentive memory. At heart she is a careful woman. She will have a place for each thing, and each will be in its place, or will be put there promptly after use.

The lady has a generous nature; one that is not only sympathetic and expressive of generosity, but one who wants to do for others, wants to give to them.

There are mild sensitivity, and a highly developed quality of pride—the sort of pride that spurs the writer to greater accomplishment rather than acting as a measure of self-satisfaction.

She is self-conscious. There are many such men and women who are accused of being selfish, or sarcastic because they are so self-conscious that they are uncomfortable most of the time, and especially when they are given any attention. Self-conscious people may blush easily, but all of them are not identified by turning red when embarrassed. There is no single physical indication of this condition, but handwriting always shows it.

Understand this trait, and you will have a clearer picture of your sweetheart or your lover who is self-conscious. Keep in mind that ridicule does not help. Give a self-conscious person understanding, sympathy, encouragement and you will have gone a long way toward building abiding love, and sublime faith.

PERSONALITY PLUS-- WITH ACCESSORIES

By Christine Jackson

Do you ever relax and wonder Who You Are? Do you ever try to add that little 'something' to your personality and clothes, showing yourself to your friends and the world generally that you're a Very Important Person when it comes to flashes of ingenuity and daring?

It's a great morale booster, especially now that accessories will become more and more evident as winter hovers into sight, and by just being a little bit independent—a little bit different—you can create a whole new wardrobe that will be tops for the season.

The great white way is here again—collars, cuffs, peplums, bags and jewellery. A basic, over any black dress that needs a bit of livening up is a great big horseshoe bib in white pique. The yoke extends from shoulder-to-shoulder, and buttons up to a loosely shaped collar; for those who prefer revers, try the little trick of wearing one pointing up—one down.

Cuffs come into the picture teamed with Gainsborough collars—especially detectable is Press-Joe's little-girl set of scalloped collar and cuffs, the latter on three-quarter sleeves, with the collar a huge, filmy creation cut like a sailor-boy's.

The days when Dad used to order "one coat, 2 prs. trousers" for the price of one have, unfortunately, gone—but the Modern Miss has decided that a winter suit with two skirts is a really admirable saving on her budget, especially if teamed up with this season's brilliant weskits in jewel-tone velvets and corduroys. Have a hounds-tooth check for the basic suit, and ring the changes with a plain-colour gabardine skirt, straight and tapered—not forgetting those tricky weskits of tweed a colour that turn a warm cheek to winter either side out.

And for the perfect finish, what about adding the following: A blackboard wool flannel belt, piped in white pique, a new washable fabric resembling pig-skin?

Doff the suit coat and add a white fur jacket, rayon lined, with three-quarter sleeves. Gloves—and pigskin again... either the new formality of the pearl-buttoned shortie or the eight-button classic. And to sit on those sleek curls, try a matching (and universally becoming) flowerpot cap, a wing-back helmet or the popular jockey cap in contrasting colour.

For those who adore 'hats that hug', Anne Hogan has the perfect answer in a deep-seated helmet of dyed lupin that passes every time—for moleskin!

the country hike, try a spider-planned brown velours porpoise, a hat that doesn't look silly with tweeds; while for the gal who wants to look elegant, there's a baby bonnet of navy felt, sound in velvet, and quilled on the off-side.

The splash of colour.

Have fun and play up the little things, as few things are more refreshing in this dusty old world than whole-hearted enthusiasm in opinion, outlook—and dress! Look what a bit of nonsense will do for you—at the neck or shoulders, on your sleeve, around your waist—and let it go to your head.

A squinned tulle scarf to keep your hair tidy; simulated "sculptured" pearls, wonderfully precious-seeming, with simulated sapphire clasps, to be worn in a myriad ways—day and night; winning hands on display decorated by the barbaric splendour of huge rings with frayed fake stones in beautiful settings such as the ring with two rhinestone domes that may be unscrewed and replaced with other tops, or the plastic rings, clear or black, set with rhinestone solitaires, coupled with matching earrings of chandelier dimensions.

From head-to-toe. And what could be newer than the velvet dancing pump or slipper, or the evening shoe, in unlined white cotton lace with a black satin heel and trimming?

And finally—for that last little bit of mischief due a Big Evening, let's hearken back to camel-hair and chiffon... for the former, try a drift of them on to a wired lattice cap of satin for restaurant wear and follow it up with another flower at your wrist or tucked into your handbag.

Chiffon has a charm mysterious, delicate and reminiscent of the twenties—that gives you an aid wherever you wear it. Try it knotted at your waist, or pleated into a great chou on one shoulder for evening, as pictured here; carry a drift from your wrist, vanity, or upper arm (threaded through a carved ivory bracelet), or wear it formally with a starched white collar and a suit.

IS THIS YOU? THE THIN TYPE

You are tall and too thin! Well, don't worry.

Just bear in mind when choosing your autumn wardrobe that you want to round out your silhouette and cut your height—and you will gain a reputation for willowy elegance instead of skinniness.

After all, those clothes—that look so well on the mannequins were designed for figures such as yours.

Styles

Pick these: Wrap-over coats, tent coats, the new "barrel" coat—take away from the lamp-post look.

Dolman sleeves, bishop sleeves wide, turn-back cuffs, loose-cut belted jackets cut the vertical line and so add width.

Huge collars shorten kangaroo necks, bloused and draped bodices add inches.

Flared, pleated and gathered skirts are useful hip pads; as are bouffant and tiered skirts for evening.

Contrast-coloured dresses cut height and add width, bold pattern dresses make the figure look larger.

Not These: Slinky-lined clothes, princess-cut coats and dresses, low-waists, long skirts will all add height; because they are vertical and therefore accentuate lack of curves.

Small collars will emphasize a long neck, fitted sleeves and narrow sleeves stress the vertical line again. Long skirts and length, off-shoulder necklines accentuate "skin-sleeves."

Good for you: Bulky materials, hairy-surfaced tweeds, thick pile velours all add width.

Warm-coloured plaids and checks, corduroy, long-haired furs add bulk. Shiny satin enlarges the figure.

Bad for you: Smooth-surfaced materials such as crepe or wool are slimming. Silk jersey clings; chiffon and other transparent materials emphasize figure fault.

These Help: Medium-crowned hats with fairly wide brims will balance your silhouette, wide belts or sashes in brash colours will cut your height.

Chunky jewellery, large handbags and coloured gloves lend an appearance of proportion. Medium-heel led court shoes and low-heel shoes play down your height.

Don't: High-crowned and feather-trimmed hats add height. Drop ear-rings lengthen the face. "Ticky" handbags look absurd; spindly-heeled court shoes add unwanted inches. High-piled and off the face hair-styles elongate the face and add unwanted height. Long fingernails make the hands and arms look even longer and thinner.

Yard-length ropes of pearls, jet-and-coloured beads, though fashionable at the moment, stress the vertical.

If you are 18 to 25: Open-necked shirts with brightly

U.S. as a woman sees it

Two out of three Americans don't eat enough breakfast.

More and more scientists have become interested in how much Americans eat—and when. The results of their research, including the latest recently concluded at the University of Iowa, show that in spite of being scolded by everybody from dieticians to psychiatrists, Americans still skip breakfast or cut it out completely.

Teen-age girls are the worst offenders. Nearly half of them start the day with merely a hastily grabbed cup of coffee. Most of them admit they worry about their weight.

But the odd thing is that the scientists tell us that when an adequate breakfast was substituted for the cup of coffee regime in the experiment at the University of Iowa, none of the young men who volunteered to be guinea-pigs in the experiment put on any weight.

Americans have developed bad eating habits all round.

They are in a rush before they get outside the front door. The subway ride (at which even a surdine would look askance) doesn't help, and at lunchtime the alternatives for most people are a hasty sandwich snatched at a drugstore luncheon counter with impatient standees breathing hungrily over your shoulder, or a meal which cannot possibly cost you less than nine shillings and even then is not likely to include meat.

Can anyone blame the young and impecunious for waiting till they get home?

But it just happens, say the dieticians, that that is the worst possible time for a heavy meal, since one is apt to be less active at the end of the day.

The answer seems to be space out the day's three meals better, with more emphasis on breakfast and less on lunch.

HAREM LINE MAY COME BACK

According to social historians men shared the delight of their women-folk in the frivolities of dress even as late as 160 years ago. They fussed about their hair, their shirt ruffles and their hats; since then, however, their dress has become progressively less interesting. Their attitude towards women's fashions today is one of pained remonstrance—unless, of course, they happen to be in the trade—so that the latest extravaganzas shown in the fashion collections are likely to raise masculine protests.

These are the hemlines on coats and dresses which stole much of the limelight in the recent London dress collections. There were lines which sloped from shoulder width; spiral lines on three-quarter coats; sac-roals which narrowed to a wide shoulder line to a tapered curved hem. But the biggest surprise was the harem line for evening which consisted of a full skirt drawn into a narrow band at the ankle. The mannequin who wore it was reduced to tottering down the room.

coloured chiffon hankies tied cowboy fashion, shorten the neck. The new ballet shoes and patent leather "flaties" cut height. Dirdal skirts add width. Twenty-five to 35. Choker necklaces will broaden your neck; jewelled belts will cut your height and stud ear-rings will broaden your face. Chiffon handkerchiefs trailing from waist or wrist accentuate your elegance.

Round About 40: Beary nail varnishes and chunky bracelets will accentuate your well-kept hands. Coloured hair rings, casual fur capes will emphasize your mature poise.

The Smooth Look

By Gloria Grey

The Smooth Look is the well-groomed finish which is so much more effective than just good looks. Everyone can achieve it — seems straight, no unnecessary extras, no glaring mistakes in your whole set-up: the effect which looks effortless, yet calls for strict attention to all details.

When you see anyone made up by a trained beautician, you are impressed with their smooth glowing complexion. Part of the secret lies in the foundation. The colour should be slightly darker than your skin tone and the minutest amount used. "Fairy" finger tips should pat and blend it until the skin has the smooth texture of silk.

A cream rouge is very easy to apply and can be made to look like your own natural colour. After placing three little dots high on the cushion of your cheek (you can tell this by smiling), blend it out and up to just under the eyes, towards the sides and up on the temples a little, until it is hardly visible at the edge. A face that is too round can be made to appear narrower by running the rouge off at the sides of the cheek bones.

Art of powdering

Powdering is an art to itself. After evenly covering a puff with powder (one darker than your skin and as fine as possible), press it on your face so that it penetrates below the down of the skin, then very lightly stroke it downwards. Use a face-powder brush for removing any excess, and to give you that smooth matt finish.

Make the most of your eyes. If your eyebrows are straggly, pluck out the stray hairs so that you make a defined frame for your eyes. Lengthen the line of your brows, if necessary, with an eyebrow pencil. Long lashes make the eyes look larger and more expressive. There are eyelash waxes to increase their growth, and perseverance with them will prove well worth while. Cream mascara are quite simple to apply and last well, but if you use the block kind, see that the brush is not too wet.

The sun can be tempting and small doses are good and beneficial to your health, but there are tonics and oils to keep your complexion smooth and to protect it from the injurious light rays which dry it up and make it harsh and rough.

Sunburn weather can play havoc with your tresses, and the salt water under your bathing cap, call for more frequent shampooing and can combine it with the healthiest head of hair into a "matted" covering.

For your shampoo, use a creamy one and get into the habit of using pomade or hair cream. A light touch of cream smoother on with your palms will not only make your hair stay in place, but will also give a light coating that guards it against sun and water.

Brushing encourages the natural oils to do their work and there are purse-size brushes available. When choosing a style for hair, select one that not only suits the shape of your face, but the texture of your hair also. Soft fine hair is always the most difficult to keep in place, so you should find a style that helps it and gives it that smooth look.

Ann Temple KEEPING HOUSE

What can one do against a husband's persistent refusal to give a housekeeping allowance?

We both came out of the Services the same year and I worked until the arrival of our child two years ago. Since then I have been doing out 10s. at a time and so never have any money in my pocket.

He says it is a man's right to have his wife utterly dependent on him.

He himself has always enough to buy all the cigarettes and drinks he requires.

Must I just bear with it?

B. R.

Can you? It beats me how any woman could allow a husband to get away with such silly talk and selfish behaviour for one week—let alone two years.

Too late, I know, to remind you that the best piece of practical economic advice on marriage ever given is "Begin as you mean to go on." But it may serve for others here.

I know, too, that you can argue and theorise over this particular problem till the cows come home—to no practical good or purpose.

What you can do is to turn the 10s. dole into an allowance.

First, you will have to get down to a hard and fast comprehensive weekly budget.

Work out what you need and how it is spent, and ask for that ten bob twice a day if necessary. See that you get it often enough in the week to cover your weekly expenses and don't leave out of your budget a fair amount for yourself over and above the bare housekeeping expenses.

If you really stick your toes in and keep this up with a book to show every detail of your expenditure you should reduce him by robust common sense to giving you the allowance weekly.

Let him talk! You act. And by sheer practical hardheadedness move up unobtrusively into the position of partner.

His wife is desperately unhappy. I am anxious to befriend her and their young children.

I have been able to do this while he is away, but am wondering how to continue when he returns, which will be soon. I find I am nervous about meeting him, afraid to say or do the wrong thing.

What if he wishes to cut all old friends? That often happens, I am told.—N. P.

True, you can't be sure of his reactions, but be as normal with him as though he were returning from a journey, and you can't go wrong.

You can put a quiet welcome into your manner and one brief remark that you are very glad to see him home again. After that, take your cue from him. He may be quite open about his experience. If so, listen. If he is carefully avoiding any reference to it, help him by talking yourself on general topics.

What he needs most is the friend who will help him re-establish himself as a normal citizen: help him to start again without prejudice or patronage.

If you can possibly do so without an obvious going out of your way, get him to help you in some little way. To make a man feel that he is needed disarms him of suspicion and resentment. Your being able to befriend them all as a family depends on your proving a good friend to him.

How to cry

I am told that one feels better after a good cry. When my feelings are hurt by an unkind word or action I immediately react the other way and say to myself, "Damn!"

Try as I will I can't shed a tear in self-pity. But I noticed tears welled up the other day as I listened to a daughter proposing the health of her parents on their silver wedding anniversary.

I should love to have a really good cry.—D.R.Y.E.D.

Of the two reactions, anger and self-pity, give me anger. It's healthier. If you find relief in

PARENT-TEACHER RELATIONSHIPS

By DOROTHY MOHR

A child cannot be divided into watertight compartments. The child who at school is just one of a large number is the same person who is the king of his domain in a small and loving household.

He often reacts to things which happen to him at school in a totally different manner from the way he would react to similar situations at home, but basically, he is the same.

The parents must of necessity take responsibility for his actions while at school. This is not only recognised by Law—for instance, in the laws regarding truancy—but also whether consciously or not, by most parents. The teacher, too, must take into account all the things which happen in the child's life, both at home and at school, if he or she is to fully understand the child's needs and difficulties.

If the child is being bullied at school, his behaviour at home suffers in some way. He may begin to tense or bully his younger brothers or sisters, have nightmares or refuse to go to school. On the other hand, he may fail to keep up in class with children of his own age because he is expected to do much work at home, is having insufficient rest or has some physical defect such as infected tonsils.

Once the child starts going to school, the task of guiding him and educating him is divided between the parents and teachers. No division of labour works smoothly and efficiently unless the responsibility for the whole job is shared in the real sense of the word by those taking part in it.

How can we, as parents, really share with our children's teachers in the enormous job of bringing up our children? We obviously are not doing it if we never go near the school except to have the child enrolled, nor if we go only when we have some complaint to make.

Essential

The most essential thing to do is to get to know the teachers, and even this often involves some effort. It is comparatively easy with the kindergarten-age children, because it is more usual to take them to school each day and so there are many though brief opportunities for making the teacher's acquaintance and having chats with her.

The older children, however, are likely to consider it a gross indignity if they are taken to school, and even if distance and dangerous crossings make it necessary for an adult to accompany them they expect to be left at the gate. However, every parent who really wants to, can make an opportunity to visit the school.

Nearly all schools have Parents' Associations, which hold regular meetings and, although they may seem in some instances to concern themselves mainly with raising money, they do at least give the parents the chance to become familiar with the school and the teachers who play such a big part in the life of the growing child. Of course, ideally, parents' associations should be far more than mere finance-raising organisations, and surely it is, up to us, the parents, to see that in the future they do become so.

If a group of parents showed itself to be really interested in what the school was trying to do and in the teachers themselves, both in their relationships with their pupils and as people, a real warmth and understanding would soon grow up in that particular school.

Have you ever thought about the teacher of your child as a person? Has it ever occurred to you to ask any of them to your home?

It's the self-pity that is lacking (good), not the capacity for tears. You seem to have quite a little penchant for sentimental tears—no harm in them at all. So you would probably get your "really good cry" at an all-handkerchiefs-out picture or play. You can sit alone in the dark and enjoy a whole flood of relieving tears all to yourself.

year on the children's progress, but do you ever let the teacher have any particular piece of information which you feel may be helpful to her in the understanding and management of any of your children's problems?

Making things easier

And surely it would make things easier if we made a point of sending a note round to the school if the child has to stay away for any reason, instead of waiting till he returns to send the usual letter of explanation.

All these are small things, perhaps, but they can make a big difference to the sort of general relationship that exists between the parents and teachers, who, together, face the task of bringing up our future citizens. It must make a tremendous difference in the children's lives if easy, friendly relationships are firmly established between the two groups of people so important to them.

This is all very well, but many of you are probably saying: "What about the teachers, surely they should do some of the sharing, too, and co-operate with the parents in their turn?"

Certainly they should, and perhaps some of them do not seem to be as co-operative as we would like to see them, but still I think the solution lies with us. After all, we are more vitally concerned and it is up to us to make the first move.

CHILDREN AND THE CINEMA

Cinema-going by children under 10 years of age as a social habit of intellectual, moral and educational significance, is stressed in a report of a Government committee set up in Britain two years ago to consider the effects on children and whether any modification in the system of film classification and the organisation and management of juvenile film clubs was necessary.

The committee found that the habit of cinema-going is strongly ingrained in the modern child, and that there is no danger where normal children are concerned. Physical harm to eyesight and hearing is considered negligible, but some nervous effects were detected. For this reason two recommendations were made: (1) That a minimum age of seven for unaccompanied children should be rigidly observed; (2) That no child under 12 years of age should be allowed in cinemas after eight o'clock at night.

It was also suggested that a permanent Central Committee on Children and the Cinema, composed of child welfare and child psychology experts, should be appointed to protect the interests of young film-goers and to give advice to public authorities.

Hong Kong, October 16, 1950.

Washington, October 20.
The United States Government today ordered a 25 per cent cut in the use of natural rubber by tyre and rubber companies as from November 1.

The reduction limits consumption to 75 per cent of the average monthly consumption of natural rubber in the 12 months preceding last June 30.

of the earlier consumption—was provided for December in the regulation, issued by the National Production Authority.

The order also:

(1) Limited the use of total new rubber—both natural and synthetic—to 84 per cent of the monthly average in the year prior to June 30.

(2) Restricted the use of latex in this quarter—October, November and December—to one-fourth of the consumption in the same base year. (This, in effect, restricts current usage to the average of the base year.)

(3) Required importers of rubber latex to offer at least 10 per cent of the shipments to the Government's General Services Administration for Federal stockpile purchases at current market price.

(4) Transferred to the National Production Authority the responsibility for formal allocation of Government-produced synthetic rubber.

(Synthetic has been handled informally up to this time by the Office of Rubber Reserve in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. No change in present selling procedures is expected.)

Today's order was directed at conserving natural rubber and forcing tyre manufacturers to use greater proportions of synthetic. Natural rubber is wanted for defence stockpiling.

The National Production Authority also set aside for the defence program the entire output of stainless steels containing Columbium—a hard alloy used primarily in making equipment for use in chemical and industrial processes.—Reuter.

NY COTTON

New York, October 20.

Cotton futures were reactionary. Liquidation was stimulated today by the statement of Presi-

ed to $2.50 a bale, but the market later recovered partially on mil-selling was fairly extensive in early dealings. Futures moved irregularly higher in late dealings on increased mill buyings and short coverings.

Release of Sterling to Pakistan agreed

London, October 20.

Mr. Douglas Jay, Financial Secretary to the Treasury, told Parliament today that Britain had agreed to make an additional Sterling balance release to Pakistan of £2,500,000.

This would cover Pakistan's requirements up to the end of December, 1950, when the matter would again be reviewed between the two Governments.

This agreement was made during recent conversations which Pakistan's Finance Minister, Mr.
Ghulam Mohammed, had with the Minister of State for Economic Affairs, Mr. Hugh Galkell (now Chancellor of the Exchequer).

Captain G. R. Chelwynd, Lau-bour Member for Stockton-on-Tees, asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he had any statement to make about the recent conversations of the Minister of State for Economic Affairs with the Finance Minister of Pakistan.

Mr. Jay, in a written reply, stated that in the course of these conversations the opportunity was taken to review the arrangements agreed between the two Governments on July 27 last regarding drawings on Pakistan's sterling balances during the year ending June 30, 1951.

In that agreement it was contemplated that supplementary transfers might be found to be necessary by the end of September, 1950, for the purpose of meeting Pakistan's requirement for foreign exchange.

It has now been agreed that an additional transfer of £2,500-000 may be made to cover Pakistan's requirements up to the end of December, 1950, when the matter will again be reviewed between the two Governments, the Parliamentary reply stated.—

Plan to stabilise
silk prices

New York, October 20.

The International Silk Association ended a week-long conference here today after delegates from 15 nations approved a Japanese plan to stabilise raw silk prices.

The plan involves creation of a control body of Japanese silk producers and establishing floor and ceiling prices. Japan produces 80 per cent of the world's silk supply.

The Executive Committee, headed by the Association President, Arata Futen, of Lyon, France, will forward a resolution supporting the Japanese programme to U.S. Government officials at Washington and Tokyo.

A Japanese proposal to raise from $100,000 to $500,000
from Association members to finance worldwide promotion of the silk industry was discussed but no action taken.

The Association accepted Britains invitation to hold its 1951 world meeting at London next September.

Delegates will start for home after attending a dinner dance at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel tonight.—Associated Press.

Canada's Trade Deficit

Ottawa, October 20.

Canada had a foreign trade deficit of $14,300,000 for the first eight months of 1950 compared with a surplus of $83,700,000 for the same period last year.

The Federal Bureau of Statistics said that the shift was caused mainly by a sharp decline in exports to Commonwealth countries and a sharp increase in imports.

During the period Canada reduced its traditional deficit with the United States from $389,100-000 for the same time last year to $99,000,000.

Its traditional credit balance with Britain was also reduced from $91,100,000 to $23,000,000.—

Shortage of capital for South Asia

New York, October 20.
A senior State Department official today predicted that only a small amount of foreign investment funds would be available in the near future for the development of South Asia.

He was Mr. George Mc-Ghee, Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South
Asian and African affairs.

In a speech to the Far Eastern American Council of Industry and Commerce, he said, "In view of world conditions, it is not likely that a large volume of private capital will flow from the United States or other developed countries into South Asia in the near future."

India and Pakistan in particular would be affected if ample investment funds were not made available, he said.
Both must receive increased foreign investments if their development plans were to succeed.—Reuter.

LONDON STOCKS

London, October 20.

The news of Sir Stafford Cripps' resignation as Chancellor of the Exchequer was received quietly on the London Stock Exchange and prices showed no reaction.

Domestic issues were very firm on investment demand for textiles and other industrial groups.
Gift-related issues were fractionally higher, with British Electric leading the rise with a gain of 3/16. Mining stocks were hesitant and showed South Africans lower on revival of talk of sterling revolution.

The Financial Times' index was 117.8, up 4.—Associated Press.

Nationalisation
Hint in Burma

Rangoon, October 20.

The Burmese Government today expressed itself in favour of the progressive nationalisation of foreign oil companies.

The Government suggested in an official report that the oil companies resume suspended negotiations with the Government to rehabilitate the industry from the national viewpoint.

Sources in close touch with the companies said there is very little chance of joint rehabilitation of the industry by the Government and private firms.—Associated

"SCORPIONS" DEFEAT KCC

P.V. Dodge of KCC scores 112

A brilliant 112 by P. V. Dodge of KCC featured the First Division League cricket match between Hong Kong Cricket Club "Scorpions" and Kowloon Cricket Club at Chater Road yesterday, the game ending in a victory for the "Scorpions" by one wicket.

Veteran Harry Owen-Hughes, who scored the winning run for the "Scorpions" also came off well with the bat and had 92 not out to his credit at the close of play.

The game between Club de Reccolo and Hong Kong Cricket Club "Optimists" at King's Park ended in a draw.

Army, who were guests of Craighower Cricket Club at Happy Valley, scored an easy win over their hosts, whom they beat by 138 runs.

Royal Air Force accounted for Hong Kong University at Kai Tak by eight wickets while the Indian Recreation Club scored a similar victory over Royal Navy.

HKCC "Scorpions"—KCC

In a high scoring First Division League cricket match at Chater Road yesterday, in the course of which more than 400 runs were scored, Hong Kong Cricket Club "Scorpions" beat Kowloon Cricket Club by one wicket.

Taking first innings of the wicket, KCC knocked up 205 runs for five wickets declared, P. V. Dodge being topscorer with a brilliant 112. Archie Zimmerman contributed a useful 44 runs.

Roberts was the only "Scorpion" bowler to meet with any success, his two wickets costing 24 runs.

Veteran Harry Owen-Hughes, who opened for the "Scorpions" with H. M. Newton, was in fine form with the bat and had 92 not out to his credit at the close of play.

There was an exciting finish to this game. With the score tied at 205 and the last "Scorpion" batsman in, Owen-Hughes nicked a ball from A. T. Lee for a four. It was a chance, but a rather difficult one, as Zimmerman found the flight of the ball too fast.

A. T. Lee bowled excellently for his five wickets for 41 runs, Davidson captured four for 52.

SOCCER:

Army suffer first defeat of season

Army suffered their first defeat of the current soccer season yesterday, when they went down to Kowloon Motor Bus by four goals to one in a First Division League game played before a capacity crowd at Boundary Street. Although they were beaten, the soldiers were by no means disgraced, as they were handicapped by injuries to Brown and Wootton and had the misfortune to have three goals scored by them disallowed.

Club, who visited Caroline Hill for their game against Chinese A.A. came away with both points as the result of a 3-1 victory over their opponents.

South China did not have much difficulty in accounting for Eastern, whom they beat by five goals to two at Causeway Bay. Royal Air Force put up a spirited display against Kit Chee at Sookpoo and only lost by one goal, the final score being 3-2 in favour of the Chinese.

KMB—Army

Army met their Waterloo yesterday, when they lost to Kowloon Motor Bus by four goals to one in a hard fought First Division League soccer match at Boundary Street.

The soldiers played good football and were definitely unfortunate to lose.

Kingston, the Army custodian, although shaky at times, cannot be blamed for the shots which went past him.

The two backs, as well as the intermediate line, played a fine spilling game and covered each other well.

Kingston, who occupied the centre-forward berth, proved to be a forceful leader and was ably supported by Higgins and Pittam. Brown and Edwards, the two wingers, gave a sparkling performance and did all that was required of them.

Doubtful tactics

Tam Kong-pak and Fung Kwan-sing, who were much too slow for Brown, were inclined to resort to doubtful tactics as a means to an end and it is fortunate for them that the referee was not quick enough to notice the methods they employed.

In the first half, the Chinese forwards were unable to make any headway against the fast tackling Army defenders.

This reshuffle, which was not countered by the Army, had the desired effect.

Army assumed the offensive from the start but poor finishing prevented them from drawing first blood in the first minute.

A breakaway by the Chinese almost ended with their scoring a terrific ground shot by Tam Woon-cheung which had Kingston beaten all the way being deflected by Yuen Cheuk-kwan, the KMB centre-forward.

Draw first blood

Within five minutes, the soldiers drew first blood when Hilliard netted with a fine effort after breaking through the Chinese defence.

A neat movement by the Army forwards culminated in Edwards netting, but he was ruled offside and the goal disallowed.

In the 18th minute, KMB obtained the equaliser when Lee Chun-fat succeeded in eluding Cuencl and went through to score with a rasping shot.

Heartened by this success, the busmen attacked in earnest, but all their efforts to forge ahead were repulsed by the Army defenders.

The Army attack came into its own again and after a period of attacking, Edwards again had the mortification of having a goal which he scored disallowed, the referee ruling him offside.

Shortly before the interval, Yuen Cheuk-kwan netted for the busmen, but this goal was also disallowed, as it was scored from an obviously offside position.

The interval came with the teams shunting two goals.

On resumption, the busmen were the first to become dangerous and the Army goal underwent several narrow escapes as the ball was lobbed about in front of the goalmouth.

The situation was eventually relieved when Tenuel headed the ball out for a fruitless corner just as it was about to enter the net with Kingston on the ground.

The ball was immediately transferred to the other end, where Edwards sent across a perfect centre. Yu Yiu-tak, the KMB goalkeeper failed to hold the ball and it went across the goalmouth, but Hilliard was too slow and the KMB defence immediately cleared.

Army missed a wonderful opportunity of taking the lead when Brown sent the ball across the field to Edwards who immediately returned it to the KMB goalmouth. Hilliard connected the ball, but skied it from about one yard out.

Lacked punch

Undaunted by the score, the soldiers continued to fight back doggedly, but their finish lacked punch.

A goal netted by Hilliard was disallowed, it being ruled that he had handled the ball first.

KMB obtained their fourth goal when Tang Sum sent in a crashing shot from about 25 yards out. The ball struck the crossbar and as it rebounded into play, Lee Chun-fat rushed up and placed it in the net to complete his "hat-trick."

The final whistle came with the soldiers still fighting hard.

Army: Kingston, Etheridge, Capper, Wootton, Tenniel, Woods, Brown, Higgins, Hilliard, Pittam and Edwards.

K. H. Ip and Mrs. Ip retain Mixed Doubles title

The Colony Open Ladies Tennis Tournaments ended at the Ladies Recreation Club yesterday when K. H. Ip and Mrs. Ip retained their Mixed Doubles titles by defeating Edwin Tsai and Mrs. Mary Chow 4-6, 6-1, 6-4.

Neither of the two ladies seemed to be in form during the match yesterday and it was practically a duel between Ip and Tsai.

In the initial set Tsai was master of the forecourt and gold-dom allowed a shot to pass his flushing racket.

Down three games to four in the first set, Tsai and Mrs. Chow won three games in a row to clinch the set.

The second set was all K. H. Ip's, who appeared to be the supreme master on the court. He was capably supported by Mrs. Ip on the baseline though she was inclined to over-hit at times.

Close match

The final set saw a close match. Tsai and his partner took a two games to love lead when Mrs. Chow apparently recovered some of her lost form, but the Ip's levelled the score and then went on to lead five games to three.

The ninth game went to five deuces before Tsai took it to make the score five games to four. However, with victory in sight, the Ip's were not to be denied and took the remaining game for set and match.

At the conclusion of the match, the prizes to the winners and runners-up of the Colony Open Championships, and also the Club Championships and handicaps were presented by Mrs. E. H. Williams.
